CHAPTER XV

AGATHON, THE THIRTY-NINTH PATRIARCH. A. D. 661-677.

In the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, the one God.

The second division of the histories of the holy Church, consisting of six chapters and the lives of fourteen patriarchs.

Agathon was the son of the patriarch Benjamin in the spirit, not in the flesh; and he is the thirty-ninth in the series of the patriarchs.

When the great champion and maintainer of the faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and teacher of the orthodox creed, Abba Benjamin, returned from banishment, and resumed his seat upon the evangelical throne in the Church of God, he restored that which had been overthrown by Heraclius, and by the impure Chalcedonian Council, in the person of Proterius. For this Father Abba Benjamin reconstructed all things, and set them in order with the help of the Lord Christ, the Good Shepherd, who gave his life for his sheep, according to his words in his pure Gospel[1] : « The Good Shepherd gives his life for his sheep ». So Benjamin walked in the footsteps of his Lord, and carried his cross and followed him, and endured trials and woes and great temptations till death for the right faith, but neither retreated nor turned backwards in his conflict, until he had finished it; so that he received his reward with the saints, his fathers, who preceded him. As David says[2] in the Psalms : « Precious before the Lord is the death of his pure ones ».

So the Father Benjamin died. And the faitful God-fearing people, by the command of the Lord, took that God-fearing priest Agathon, and enthroned him as patriarch, according to the agreement of his name with his actions; for he was good and his conduct was good, adorned with every noble deed, full of the grace of the Holy Ghost and of the orthodox faith.

Now the Muslims were fighting against the Romans furiously. And the Romans had a prince whose name was Tiberius, whom they had made their ruler, and who possessed many islands. So the Muslims took the Romans captive, and carried them away from their own country to a strange land. Thus with regard to Sicily and all its provinces, they took possession of that island, and ravaged it, and brought the people captives to Egypt. And this holy patriarch Agathon was sad at heart when he saw his fellow-Christians in the hands of the Gentiles; and as the conquerors had offered many souls of them for sale, he bought them and set them free. But they were followers of the impure and heretical sects, known as the Gaianites, who do not communicate with the orthodox, and as the Barsanuphians.

And Abba Agathon did not neglect to ordain bishops in every place, that they might bring back the sheep which Satan had led astray to the Church of the Lord Christ. Therefore Satan brought down upon him great trouble on account of his purity of heart and excellence of character.

In those days Alexandria was governed by a man whose name was Theodore[1], who was a chief among a congregation of the Chalcedonians, and was an opponent of the orthodox Theodosians. This man went to Damascus to the leader of the Muslims, whose name was Yazîd, son of Mu'âwiyah, and received from him a diploma giving him authority over the people of Alexandria and Maryût and all the neighbouring districts, and declaring that the governor of Egypt had no jurisdiction over him; for he had given Yazid much money. Then Theodore returned and tyrannised over the father, Abba Agathon, and troubled him; not only demanding of him the money which he was bound to pay, and taking from him thirty-six denarii as poll-tax every year, on account of his disciples, but that which he spent upon the sailors in the fleet he also exacted from him. And whenever he wanted funds he required the patriarch to supply them. But the community of the Chalcedonians would not associate with this man. The patriarch needed seven thousand denarii to satisfy the demands of Theodore the Chalcedonian, besides the taxes upon his property, and was prevented from leaving his cell by the governor's cruel hostility on account of his orthodox faith, for he even issued a command, saying : « Whoever shall see the pope of the Theodosians going out by night or by day, may stone him to death, and I will be responsible for him ». So the Father Agathon lay hid during the days of that impious official, praying for him according to the injunction of the Gospel[1] : « Love your enemies, bless those that curse you ».

In the days of Abba Agathon was built the church which was dedicated in the name of the Father Macarius. And the brethren multiplied so that they built the cells near the Marsh; and they increased by the grace of the Lord Christ, and the believing brethren assisted them. In those days there appeared at the monastery a man, pure in body and clean of heart, learned in the two kinds of wisdom, the ecclesiastical and the secular, whose name was John, a native of Samannud. While he was making a pilgrimage to the desert he was attacked by a sore sickness, and none of the seniors believed that he would be healed. Then one night he saw a dream as if one in human form giving forth light and in great glory, sitting on the throne of the Seraphim and surrounded by a multitude, alighted near the door of his cell. And he beheld a band of seniors, the holy fathers who live in the desert, going forward to receive the blessing of him that sat on the throne. And he said in his own mind : « If I had some one who would take me, I also would go forward to this great heavenly king, and receive his blessing, and then perchance I should recover from this sickness and pain ». At that moment there approached him one of those who had been standing around the throne and him that sat upon it, a man clothed in the raiment of the patriarchs and apostles, and holding upon his breast a book like the gospel; and he said : « Wilt thou that I bring thee to our Lord that he may grant thee the grace of healing? » Then John prostrated himself before that man with tears and prayed him saying : « Have pity on me, O my Lord, and take me to him, for I am in great trouble ». So that holy one answered and said to him, for he was a priest : « O John, tell me that, if thou shalt be healed by the Lord, thou wilt be a son to me, and I will take thee to him ». And he promised him in the vision that he would be a son to him until the day of his death; and that man took his hand and brought him to the Saviour of the world. Thereupon John fell prostrate at his feet, and the Saviour said to him : « O John, why love ye vanity, ye sons of men, and neglect the truth, and seek lies[1]? Behold, didst thou intend in coming hither to build for thyself a cell of clay which will quickly disappear, or to lay up for thyself treasures in heaven, and erect for thyself in the heavenly Jerusalem, the new city, a mansion which will not perish? » So he fell at his feet and prayed to be forgiven. And the Lord raised him up and said to him : «Now I grant thee the healing of thy sickness for the sake of Mark the Evangelist; therefore depart, and do all that he bids thee ». Then the Lord ascended to heaven with glory and majesty.

After that John awoke from his dream, healed of his sickness. And he meditated, saying : « What is this that has now been done? » Then consolation descended upon him from that day. And he went to a monastery in the province of the Faiyûm, accompanied by his two disciples; and he concealed himself there.

Subsequently there appeared to Abba Agathon one who said to him : « Send to John the priest, who is of Samannûd, that he may help thee and assist thee; for it is he that shall sit after thee upon the throne ». Accordingly the patriarch despatched some of the clergy to the bishop of the Faiyûm, Abba Mennas, and wrote bidding him send to him the priest John. Now that bishop loved John, and profited by his discourse, but he could not contradict the Father Patriarch. So he sent the messengers to John, and they brought him in a boat, and the bishop despatched him to Alexandria.

When the patriarch saw John he rejoiced over him, because he was very wise; and therefore he delivered to him his church, and gave him authority over it and over the city. And some of the people prayed him to ordain John bishop over Upper Egypt, and others suggested some other see. But God was reserving him for his gentleness like David, that he might accomplish for him what had been promised in the vision in Wadi Habib.

And that true father, Agathon, was occupied all his days in providing for the ordination of priests who were worthy of the laying on of hands and were full of the fear of God; while men thanked God for his deeds. In his time lived the blessed bishop Gregory, bishop of Al-Kais, and a Syrian, whose name was Joseph. In his days also appeared the foul heresy of the Monk.

There was a commander among the Muslims, whose name was Maslamah, and he called together seven bishops, and sent them to Sakha on business connected with some people there, who were alleged to have burnt with fire some of the clerks employed there. The bishops were directed to try the accused; and, when they arrived at Sakha, they acted in concert with a man who was a magistrate there, named Isaac, and they corrected the state of affairs; and those men were healed from the burning. And the said Isaac came to an agreement with the governor of Sakha, and together they prevailed over Theodore the Chalcedonian who was at Alexandria. For this Isaac had received authority over the whole province on his account, because of the harm that he had done to the patriarch.

Then the patriarch Agathon finished his days in a good old age, and at the end he fell sick after remaining seventeen years upon his throne, and went to his rest on the 16th of Bâbah. And his body was placed, as it is written in the history of Saint Macarius, with the Father Benjamin. He died keeping the orthodox faith, and is now wearing the crown of righteousness with all the saints in the land of the living for ever and ever. Amen.

JOHN III, OF SAMANNUD, THE FORTIETH PATRIARCH. A. D. 677-686.

When the holy father, Abba Agathon, went to his rest, Theodore the Chalcedonian laid his hand on everything, so that they did not find even bread to eat on the day of the patriarch's death; for he set his seal on all that belonged to Agathon, and on all that they had. But at last the Lord took vengeance on Theodore by a sore plague in his vitals, namely the disease of the dropsy; and he began to eat every day twelve pounds of bread and twenty-four pounds of meat and two baskets of figs, and to drink daily one skin of wine of Maryût; and yet neither his hunger nor his thirst was satisfied, nor was his belly filled. Thus he died an evil death.

And his son was appointed governor instead of him, and became like a son to our father Abba John, for he had confidence in him and love for him. Thus the Father Patriarch led him like a son. At the beginning of his occupation of the see took place the slaying of Tiberius who was prince of Byzantium; and his son took the empire, and his name was Augustus. And when this man began to reign, he made war upon the coasts which the Muslims had taken, and recovered them. And he took many islands of which the Muslims had gained possession, and so likewise he restored Sicily.

At that time there arose one who was no true monk in the city of Constantinople, whose name was Maximus; and he stirred up disturbance and trouble in his country. For he said : « If you truly believe in the faith of Chalcedon, then confess the doctrine of two Natures and two Persons and two Hypostases and two Wills and two Velleities, which the council taught. » So many people followed him; and there arose a great dispute between the two parties. And Augustus the prince was angry with them, and sent this man who was no true monk into exile. And this prince went to Sicily after a time, and was * killed there like a slaughtered victim by one of his two attendants.

After him his son Justinian ruled the empire instead of him, and he was a bold prince; and the fear of him fell upon the hearts of the Muslims as when a lion leaps out upon a pack of wolves.

But in those days, after the death of Yazîd, the son of Mu'âwiyah, there arose from the land of the Muslims a prince, whose name was Marwân, who rushed forth like a lion when he comes out of his den hungry, and devours the rest or tramples them under foot. He took possession of the East and of Fusṭâṭ Miṣr. And he made his sons governors over all the provinces. To the eldest of them, whose name was Abd al-Malik, he gave Damascus; and to the second, Abd al-Azîz, he gave Egypt.

And there was great enmity between Marwân and the Egyptians, because they had set their hopes on the arrival of another man, whose name was Ibn az-Zubair. But when he arrived, Marwân defeated him. And there were appointed for Abd al-Azîz two secretaries, trustworthy and orthodox, whom he set over the whole of the land of Egypt and Maryûṭ and Marâkiyah and Pentapolis which is Libya. One of them was named Athanasius, and he had three sons, and was a native of Edessa in the land of Syria; while the other's name was Isaac, and he and his two sons were natives of Shubrâ Tani, of a good and orthodox family.

And when Abd al-Azîz became governor of Egypt, the Father Patriarch wrote from Alexandria to Miṣr to the two scribes who presided over his divan, to make known to them what had been done concerning the seal, which was set upon all the places, and the trouble with the misbelieving Chalcedonians from which he was suffering. Thereupon the said scribes sent messengers to Alexandria with instructions that the seal should be broken in the places named, and that all the property of the Church should be delivered to the Father Patriarch.

as in Moses the prophet, so that none could look upon his face, nor discern its features nor the sockets of his eyes on account of the great light which was upon it. And the Lord healed many of the sick through his prayers; and he was a virgin in soul and body; and he lived in peace with all men. And his deeds and wonders were manifested, so that even the prince and all in his palace heard of them, and sent gifts to him from Constantinople.

And in the first year that Abd al-Azîz became governor, he went to Alexandria, according to the custom of those who were appointed governors, to receive its taxes, which were every day a thousand denarii in cash. Then much money was sent to the prince of the Romans; and there was a truce for ten years without war. When the governor arrived at the city, since his entry was not public but private, the patriarch did not go forth to meet him, because he did not know of his coming. Thereupon he was denounced by many people, misbelievers and heretics, whose leader was a man named Theophanes, the husband of the sister of Theodore the Chalcedonian; for they said that he did not go forth nor meet him on account of the greatness of his pride and haughtiness, and his great wealth. Then Abd al-Aziz sent in anger and summoned the blessed Abba John to the palace, and made him stand before him, and said to him: « What is the cause of thy stiffnecked pride and of thy delay in coming forth to meet me outside this city? » The blessed one answered and said to him: « God knows that I did not do this on account of stiffness of neck, but on account of my weakness, and because I cannot always go forth from the city to another place ». Then the Amir was angry and delivered him to certain officers until he should pay a hundred thousand denarii; and he was received into custody by the governor of a castle, who was named Samad, a man without mercy, hard of heart and full of evil. This man received the patriarch on the first day of the Great Week before Easter; and took him and brought him to his dwelling, to torment him until he should pay the money. Afterwards he made him stand before him; and there were with the patriarch two men of good families, namely Arâs the priest, steward of the property of the Church, a man of peace, adorned with every excellence, famous for his gentleness among the inhabitants of the whole city, and the deacon, his secretary, a wise man, loving his fellows, learned in the Scriptures, and virtuous. So when that evil man made our father, the patriarch, stand before him, he said to him : « I require of thee one hundred thousand denarii, which the Amir commands thee to pay ». So he answered and said to him calmly and quietly : « Thou demandest of me one hundred thousand denarii, and I have not out of that sum one hundred thousand drachmae. But my God has not put in his law a command that I should save anything for myself, or gain money at all, for it is the root of all evil. Do therefore whatever it pleases thee to do. My body is in thy hands, but my soul and body are both in the hands of my Lord Jesus Christ ». When the misbeliever heard this, he was greatly indignant, and he gnashed with his teeth at the saint, and commanded that a brazen vessel full of coals of fire should be brought, and his feet placed in it until he should say that he would pay the money. But God, the ruler of his servants, sent down that night upon the wife of the Amir Abd al-Azîz a sore sickness, so that she was troubled and sent her eunuch to Samad, to say to him : « Take heed that thou do no harm to that man of God, the patriarch, whom they have delivered to thee; for great trials have befallen me on account of him this night ». So Samad against his will released the patriarch, as well as his two good and excellent sons, until the morrow, that he might take thought as to what he should do with him.

Then at the time of cock-crow Samad went to the Amir and had an interview with him, and made known to him what had happened, and that he had not put the patriarch to the torture. So the Amir said to him : « Beware of touching his body, because of what has befallen us this night on his account. But whatever thou canst obtain from him, take it from him by gentle means, and if that be impossible, yet do no harm to him, for God has revealed to me that he is his servant ».

So Samad returned to his house. And it was now Tuesday in the Great Week. So he summoned John, the holy patriarch, before him, and threatened him with many threats, and brought him the garments of a Jew, and swore that if he would not pay the sum of money that he had first required of him, he would clothe him with those garments, and defile his face with ashes, and lead him round the whole city. But John was not at all afraid, but kept saying to him with a brave heart : « Even if the Lord my God does not save me from thy hand, yet thou hast no power to do aught to me except by his command ». Then Samad the misbeliever said to him : « I will yield to thee fifty thousand denarii; and thou shalt pay fifty thousand denarii; and I will release thee to negotiate as thou canst, and raise that sum for me ». The saintly patriarch answered and said to him : « The only things that I can dispose of are my garments which are upon my body ». After that Samad did not cease to lower his demands until he reached ten thousand denarii. So the patriarch said to him : « I will not promise what I cannot perform ». Then when the news came to the secretaries who administered the affairs of Alexandria that the sum demanded had come down to ten thousand denarii, they sent to Abba John and said to him : « Undertake to pay the ten thousand denarii, and we will divide the debt among the bishops and the secretaries and the divans in which we serve, so that nothing may happen to the Church ».

Then they went to Abd al-Azîz, and prayed him to summon the patriarch, and hear from him what he had to say. And that day was the Great Thursday. So when the governor had sent for him, and raised his eyes to him, he saw him as if he were in the similitude of an angel of God. Then he commanded at once that an ample cushion should be brought for Abba John; and when it was laid down, he sat upon it. And Abd al-Aziz said to him :

« Knowest thou not that the governor may not be thwarted? » The saint answered and said to him : « The governor's command is obeyed in what is right, but his orders are disobeyed when they are displeasing to God. For our Lord says in the Gospel[1] : Fear not those that kill the body, and have no power over the soul, but fear him who can destroy the soul and the body together : that is to say God, who alone can do this » Then the Amir said to him : « Thy God loves honesty and truth ». The patriarch replied : « My God is all truth, and there is no lie in him; but he destroys all those that speak lies ». The Amir answered and said to him : « Thou art honest with me. Therefore whatever the Christians shall give to thee, * because I *P. 110 demanded it of thee, give it to me, and I will require no more of thee ». So the secretaries said to the patriarch : « Do this ». Accordingly the patriarch accepted that proposal, and the Amir released him with honour and joy, while gladness and rejoicing were spread among the orthodox, but sorrow and shame among the enemies of the Church.

And the blessed patriarch rode forth from the governor's palace, amid the acclamations of the people, who walked before him, while he was mounted on his horse, with chanting and singing, until he entered the church. There he blessed the basin of water, and washed the feet of the people; and afterwards he celebrated the Liturgy, and carried the Holy Mysteries, and communicated the people. Then he returned to his Cell, by the mercy and help of God.

Much shame and sorrow came to the heretics from this, and more to those who had accused him than to any other, and especially to Theophanes the governor of Maryûṭ. For in those days the Amir arrested him suddenly, and delivered him to the secretary, who sent him to prison, and afterwards put him to death after severe torments. And he went to Hell.

God, the only worker of miracles, vouchsafed to the Father Patriarch acceptance and favour with the Amir, who commanded throughout the city that none should address the patriarch except with good words nor say any evil of him, and that none should hinder him in what he desired, nor in going out of the city nor coming into it. Then the magistrates and believing scribes and all the orthodox people found their opportunity, and assisted Abba John, until he had paid the Amir the sum that he had finally demanded of him. And after that they assisted him also in the rebuilding of the church of the glorious martyr and evangelist Saint Mark; and he completed it in three years with every kind of decoration, and bought for it house-property in Miṣr and in Maryûṭ and in Alexandria. And he built a mill to grind wheat into flour for making biscuit, and a press for linseed oil, and many houses which he settled upon the church of the holy Saint Mark. And the Lord blessed him in every way in his deeds and words. In his days also the orthodox received into their community the people of Agharwah and the people of the Xoite nome, who had been Chalcedonians. Thus the grace of Christ helped and strengthened him.

And he prayed the Lord to reveal to him who was fit to sit after him upon the throne. So when he heard of a brother, named Isaac, learned, excellent, clothed with every virtue, who was serving God in the monastery of the holy Saint Macarius in Wadî Habîb, and had been spiritual son to a bishop, named Zacharias, full of the grace of the Holy Ghost in his venerable character and dignity and humility and good deeds, then the holy patriarch John wrote and summoned that brother to himself, and guarded him like the pupil of his eye. And the brother Isaac was engaged in the works of God, and in writing and copying books; but the patriarch notwithstanding that commanded him to become his partner in administering the affairs of the Church.

Then there came a dearth in the days of the holy John, the said patriarch, which lasted three years; but God assisted this father in supporting the poor of the city during three years; for, if he had not done so, they would have perished in the famine. He gave them their food twice every week, and also gave them money; and the mill for biscuit did not cease working night or day, but continued to grind for those that were destitute.

*P.111 * And the patriarch's eye was full of affection, and he was great in charity, and used to give alms as abundant as the sea; and he neglected nothing in his works which could please God, like John the Evangelist. At last he was attacked by a disease in his feet, arising from the gout, and he was greatly tormented by it, until the physicians treated him by the advice of his family and of the brethren who surrounded him.

At that time Abd al-Azîz journeyed to Miṣr, and Abba John travelled in company with him, until he arrived at the capital. There the patriarch suffered from a sharp pain in his side; and when the Amir was informed of it, he was sorry for him, and sent the secretaries to visit him; and they prepared a boat for him, that he might return down the river to Alexandria. And the writer of this history was with him, for he was his spiritual son. When he arrived at the city of Alexandria, the news was brought to the assembly of the bishops that he was prostrate with fever. So they entered to him. And there were in company with them Gregory, bishop of Al-Kais, and Abba John, bishop of Niciu, and Abba James, bishop of Arwâṭ, and Abba John, bishop of Sakhâ, and Abba Theodore, bishop of Metelites, and a body of the laity; and they were all sad because they saw their shepherd called from earth to heaven. like him in his deeds. And when he came to the church of the holy Saint Mark the Evangelist, which he had rebuilt by the incomprehensible decrees of God, they carried him and brought him into the great altar. Thereupon he stood up by the power of the Spirit, and said the whole of the prayer of thanksgiving; and then he lost consciousness. After that they carried him and brought him into his chamber; and so he gave up his spirit into the hand of the Lord Christ in glory and honour.

The period during which he remained on the throne was nine years; and he went to his rest on the first day of Kîhak. And his body was laid in the place which he had built for himself before his death, in the church of Saint Mark the Apostle, with chanting and praises ascending to God. To whom belong glory and honour and praise and majesty and power for ever and ever. Amen.

ding to what has been related before. For the Scripture says[1] that the Lord visits his chosen ones. And it says also[2] : « None shall take an honour by himself unless it be given him by the Lord from heaven ». And it says in the Psalm[3] : « Blessed is he whom thou choosest and receivest unto thee ». For when Abba John departed to the Lord in good remembrance, the bishops assembled together under the presidency of Gregory, the bishop of Al-Kais; and James, bishop of Arwâṭ, and John, bishop of Niciu, and a body of bishops and of the Christian laity took counsel with the clergy of Alexandria, and associated with themselves the secretary who was commissioner for the city; and they agreed that they should promote the deacon George, who was a native of Sakhâ, to the dignity of patriarch, without habit; and they proclaimed in the church that on the morrow the patriarch would be consecrated, forgetting the words of the Scripture[1] : « The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought, and maketh the thoughts of the people to be of no effect, and hindereth the commands of princes ». And when the morrow came, they clothed the deacon George with the vestment of the patriarchal office, and prepared what they needed, and brought him forth in pomp. But while they were intent upon his consecration, they met the archdeacon of the city, whose name was Mark, and who was a man of understanding, virtuous, and of high reputation in the city; and he forbad them, saying : « If you will not come to the church on Sunday, according to the custom prescribed by the canons, when all the people of the city shall be assembled, I will not assist in the ordination of this man ». Now this was God's command, that he might promote that man whom he had chosen at first, namely Abba Isaac, the monk, who was a native of Shubra.

For when the morrow came, some of the attendants of the Amir arrived and said : « Where is he whom they have appointed patriarch, and where are the bishops and the priests who appointed him, that we may take them to Miṣr under our charge? » So they took them and departed. Then, when they had enquired into the affair, they found that the documents bore witness that it was not George of whom Abba John had spoken during his lifetime. So the Amir Abd al-Azîz was angry, and cancelled George's nomination, and commanded them to appoint Isaac. And the thing was from God. So the bishops took him, and ordained him, and he sat upon the patriarchal throne for three years.

And the Lord was with Abba Isaac helping him, so that he repaired the Great Church of the Holy Mark, when its walls were sloping in, and also renewed the episcopal residence. And by his means the liturgies in the churches of the orthodox, where they could not be performed before, were restored. And he built a church at Ḥulwân, because at that place he used to go to visit the Amir Abd al-Azîz, who had commanded the magistrates of Upper Egypt and all the provinces to build, each one of them for himself, a residence at the town ol Ḥulwân.

In those days the patriarch addressed letters to the king of the Abyssinians and the king of the Nubians, bidding them make peace together and praying that there might be no ill will between them; and he wrote this on account of a dispute which there was between the two. Thereupon certain intriguers seized the opportunity of slandering Abba Isaac before Abd al-Azîz, who was greatly incensed, and sent his officers to bring him that he might put him to death. But the secretaries wrote letters different from the patriarch's letters, and gave them to the messengers whom he had sent to the Abyssinians, and took those first letters from them, in fear for the patriarch. This they only did lest evil should befall the Church. And before the patriarch was brought before the Amir, they informed him that the messengers were there, and the letters with them. So he sent in haste to seek them, and took the letters; and when he had perused them, he found nothing in them of what had been told him. Thus his anger was pacified, and he sent at once, and bade the patriarch return to Alexandria, and did not cause him again after this to come up southwards.

Then he commanded to destroy all the crosses which were in the land of Egypt, even the crosses of gold and silver. So the Christians in the land of Egypt were troubled. Moreover he wrote certain inscriptions, and placed them on the doors of the churches at Miṣr and in the Delta, saying in them : « Muḥammad is the great Apostle of God, and Jesus also is the Apostle of God. But verily God is not begotten and does not beget. »

Then the blessed one went to his rest and departed to the Lord in peace, keeping the orthodox faith, and wearing the crown of righteousness with all the Saints; and after his decease, his body was put in the place which he had prepared in the church of Saint Mark, with chanting and hymns. And the people and the priests took care as to whom they should promote after him upon the throne of the patriarchate. And a dispute took place between the clergy of Saint Mark the Evangelist and the clergy of the church of the Angelion in the city. For some said with regard to John, the Hegumen in the Monastery of Az-Zajâj, which is called in Greek To Enaton, that he was worthy of this office, because he was a learned man and a writer.

and he was also godfather to the government-secretary; but others spoke of a man, whose name was Victor, Hegumen of the Monastery of Taposiris, who was also an excellent person. When the people of the church of the Angelion were informed of John, they rejoiced, and the secretary supported them, because it was the Great Church, and there were one hundred and forty ecclesiastics attached to it. So Theodore, the magistrate of the city of Alexandria, wrote for them to the Amir Abd al-Azîz, to inform him of John, the Hegumen of the Monastery of Az-Zajâj; saying that the choice of the community had fallen upon him, that he should be patriarch.

Now the period, during which our father, the patriarch Abba Isaac, remained on the apostolic throne, was two years and nine months. And he went to his rest on the second day of Hatûr, and departed to the Lord Christ, keeping the faith, and ruling his flock. According to another copy, however, he is said to have remained in the patriarchal office three years. May the Lord have mercy upon us by his prayers, and the prayers of all whose works he approves! Amen.

SIMON I, THE FORTY-SECOND PATRIARCH. A. D. 689-701.

There was with Abba John in the monastery a holy man fearing God, excellent, learned more than many in his generation, whose name was Simon, of the people of the East, whose parents had brought him to Alexandria in his youth, and given him as an offering to the Church like Samuel, for the sake of the body of the holy Saint Severus; for it lies in a shrine in that monastery, and the Syrians used to bring to it gifts and votive offerings. Then the aforesaid Theodore took Simon, who was then a deacon, at the beginning of the days of Abba Agathon, and brought him to Abba John, that he might teach him the art of writing, and the sections of the Scriptures. And by the grace of the Lord Christ who was with him he learnt the Old Testament and much of the New in a short time, for Abba John was excellent as a teacher. So, when Abba Agathon saw that Simon was good in his conduct, he ordained him priest, so that he was the second in rank in the monastery, after his spiritual father John. Then, in consequence of what has been related, the Amir wrote a letter, and sent to summon John, whose spiritual son Simon travelled with him, besides some of the clergy of Alexandria, and Theodore the magistrate in their company. When they arrived, they gave the Amir their letter, containing the name of John: and so the Amir wished to see him. And when the Amir saw John, his heart inclined towards him, because he was a handsome person, beautiful in countenance. Then he asked the priests and bishops concerning him, and they answered : « Yea, he is fit ».

But there happened on that day a wonderful thing, like the matter of Phares and Zara, or like Adonias and Solomon, the sons of David. And this was that, after the appointment of John had been confirmed, God raised up one of the bishops like Daniel at that time, without collusion or consultation with anyone, and he said : « This man shall not be our patriarch ». Thereupon silence and wonder fell upon all the people, so that none answered him a syllable. So the Amir enquired : « Then who is fit, sayest thou? »

Then the bishop said in the presence of the assembly : « Simon is worthy of this degree ». So the Amir commanded that Simon should be brought before him. And when he saw him, he asked them and said : « Whence comes this man? » So it was told him : « He is a Syrian of the people of the East ». When he learnt this, he said to the bishops : « Then can you not appoint one of your own country? » And they answered him and said to him : « Verily the man whom we chose we brought before thee; but the matter belongs to God, and in the second place to thee ». Then he turned to the blessed Simon, and asked him whether he approved this venerable John as patriarch. And Simon gave his assent and said to him : « There is not found in the land of Egypt nor in the East one who is as worthy as this man, and he is my spiritual father, and my master from my youth; and his life is as the life of the angels ». So when the Amir heard this, he marvelled greatly. And there was a great multitude assembled; and a shout was raised among the magistrates and bishops and clergy, who cried : « May God prolong the life of the Amir for us many years! Deliver the see to Simon, for he is worthy to be patriarch. As was Abba Benjamin, so is Simon. Verily the Church supports them ». When the Amir looked at them, and heard their words with regard to a foreigner whom they had not known at all for more than two days, then he bade them with God's help take him and ordain him patriarch. And he commanded the greater part of the bishops to travel in his company. Accordingly they brought him to Alexandria, and enthroned him upon the apostolic throne in the Great Church, called the Angelion. Thus the orthodox people had great joy and peace and unity in the Church, and her affairs grew in prosperity day by day.

Then Abba Simon set his spiritual father John over the affairs of the Church, while he devoted himself to the study of the holy Scriptures. And as long as John lived, the Father Patriarch did not occupy himself with any of the affairs of the Church, but gave all that up to John his father, in the same way that he used to do with him in the monastery, obeying him and calling him « My Father ».

Then Abba Simon wrote a synodical epistle to Julian, patriarch of Antioch, at which the latter marvelled; and Simon sent it by certain bishops, and in it he reminded Julian of unity, and that this one faith and unity were between the two sees, Alexandria and Antioch. Then, when Julian studied it, he found it full of the wisdom of God and of the spiritual books, and he rejoiced greatly; and he preached in his church in the name of the father Abba Simon. He also wrote him an answer to his synodical letter, and sent back his envoys with rich gifts to Egypt.

When Simon had continued three years, his father John went to his rest in peace, and was counted worthy that the blessed Simon the Patriarch should lay his hand upon his eyes, and even shroud him with his own hand. Thus he received his father's blessing and carried him to the monastery, and buried him, and remained beside him forty days, until he had built a tomb for him. And he laid his body in it, and made it large enough to contain his own body, when he should die, that he might be buried with him therein.

Then there came to Abba Simon a trial from God, who proves his elect and purifies them one like who purifies pure silver from dross, so that they become like pure gold; and by the grace of the Lord Christ he endured until he obtained the crown. For he was a man salted with salt, like the salt of the Gospel, having no hypocrisy nor greediness of comfort or of meat or drink, but during his whole life his breakfast was bread and crushed salt with cummin and purslain or such like herbs, that he might weaken the force of his bodily appetites, and make the flesh the servant of the spirit. He used not to associate with the bishops or clergy, because he used to seek solitude so as to observe the times of prayer; and for this reason he was hated by the people of Alexandria. Therefore some of the clergy went to certain magicians, and gave them gold so that they made for them by their magic art a deadly poison,which they put in the vessel in which the Father Simon, the patriarch, used to drink, and brought it to him that he might take some of it. But he had communicated of the Holy Mysteries before he drank of it, and therefore, when he swallowed it, it did not injure him. Then those parricides did the same thing a second time, but it did not hurt him nor do him injury. So when the magicians saw this, they were amazed at what had happened to this saint. Then indeed they took fair figs out of season, and put deadly poison in them, and charged the priests, and said to them : « Give him these to eat, while he is fasting without food, and has not made his communion, and then he will burst asunder in the midst ». So they brought him the fruit with cunning and hypocrisy, and begged him and entreated him to eat of them; and there were some who pointed them out to him, and induced him to swallow of the poisoned figs. Accordingly his bowels were moved that night, and he remained forty days in great anguish, so that every one thought his death inevitable. But the Lord who gives life raised him up, and showed forth a miracle in him. And there appeared to him in a vision one who said to him : « For what cause dost thou endure these trials? »

So when the Amir came to the city, he looked upon Abba Simon, and his appearance was changed through that which had happened to him; and when the Amir asked the reason of this change, he was told by the scribes that four of the priests had given the patriarch poison to drink. Thereupon the Amir commanded that they should be burnt alive, and the magician with them, outside the city, on the north side of it, in a place called Pharos. But when they were about to burn them, the patriarch fell upon his face with many tears before the Amir, and interceded with him for them, saying to him : « If anything happens to them on my account, I must be suspended from my office, for it is not right that I should be patriarch after that ». Then the Amir marvelled at the goodness of his acts, and commanded that the ecclesiastics should be released, but that the magicians should be burnt alive on account of their former deeds. So they were burnt in the fire.

After this, Abba Simon committed to Abba John, bishop of Niciu, the management of the affairs of the monasteries, because he was conversant with the life of the monks, and knew their rules; and he gave him authority over them. At this time the monks were industriously rebuilding the cells, while the officials took charge of their maintenance. Then, however, some of those who were given up to their appetites took a virgin out of her monastery, and conveyed her to Wadî Habîb and committed sin with her secretly. When this was made known among the monks, there was great distress among them, the like of which had not been heard of in that place. So the bishop took the monk who had committed the sin, and inflicted a painful beating upon him; and ten days after his punishment that monk died. Then when the affair became known, all the bishops in the land of Egypt assembled in secret and enquired of the bishop what had happened to the monk, so he informed them concerning the event, and confessed that it was he who had beaten him; and therefore they condemned him to be deposed, because he had transgressed the limit of what humanity required in him. So they deposed him, and he was silent while they did so; and they had said to him : « It is unlawful for thee henceforth to approach any of the vessels of the sanctuary, but thou shalt receive the Mysteries like a mere monk ». Then he cried and said to the people : « Since you have deposed me unjustly, the Lord, the God whose name I know, shall make you all, O ye bishops, strangers to your sees until the end of the time during which you have condemned me ». Then they appointed another man, named Mennas, of the monastery of Saint Macarius, to be bishop in his stead; yet he was a man held in honour, powerful in words, loving the brethren.

But after a few days the saying of this holy bishop was fulfilled upon the bishops who assisted to depose him, and upon all the bishops; for a calamity came upon them. There were at that time men who were like the Gentiles, and abstained from their lawful wives, and took unlawful mistresses, showing their subjection to their passions; and yet they said that they were Christians. But the bishops rejected them, and repulsed them from the Holy Mysteries. So some of them went to the Amir and said to him : « We are forbidden to marry, and they have cast us out so that we are forced to commit fornication ». Then he was angry, and assembled the bishops from their sees to Alexandria. Accordingly sixty-four bishops were gathered together, but they knew not why they had come nor the cause of their meeting; and they used to pay their respects to the Amir every week. And the heretics, who were no true bishops, also met there, namely, Theophylact, a bishop of the Chalcedonians, and Theodore, who was one of the Gaianite adherents of Eutyches; and of the followers of Barsanuphi there was George, besides a number of others who were called bishops, and who had also been called together.

* Then when it was Sunday, news came to the Amir that the army of the *P.117
Romans had risen against the prince Justinian, and deposed him, and had appointed Leontius instead of him. So the governor at once commanded that the magistrates of every province should be gathered together, and the people of Alexandria and the bishops and the Muslims, that he might make known to them the disaster of the Romans. So a great multitude was then gathered together, and they said : « It has always been the custom of the Romans that one prince is deposed and another takes his seat ». Then the Amir commanded on that day that the Liturgies of the Christians should be forbidden. For the Muslims said that the Christians were in error, giving God a wife and a son, and uttering many falsehoods in their religion; and the Amir rebuked their want of agreement in the doctrines of religion.

Then he turned to Theodore the bishop, chief of the Gaianites, and said to him : « Of these three bishops, which is nearest to thee, and whom does thy soul receive? » He answered : « Abba Simon ». Then the Amir turned to Theophylact, the bishop, leader of the Melkites, and said to him : « Which is nearest to thee, and whose religion preferrest thou? » So he said : « I prefer the religion of Abba Simon. » Then Abd al-Aziz said to George, the Barsanuphian : « Which is the nearest to thee of these bishops, and whom does thy soul receive? » He replied : « My religion and the religion of Abba Simon are one, and it is he whom my soul loves ». he turned lastly to the father, Abba Simon, the preacher of the truth, and said : « Which of these is the nearest to thee, and the one whom thy soul loves? » So he answered and proclaimed in the assembly in a loud voice, saying : « Not one of these is near to me, nor do I love one of them, but I excommunicate by writing and by word of mouth them and their vile doctrine and their fellowship; and those who favour them and those who communicate with them I contemn as Jews ». Then the people cried with a great voice, saying : « Abba Simon confesses the truth without error ». Thereupon those men were overwhelmed with shame.

After this there came a priest from the people of the Indians to Abba Simon, to ask of him that he would ordain for him a bishop for the Indians. Now the people of the Indians were not subjects of the Muslims. So the patriarch said to the Indian priest : « I cannot ordain a bishop for you without the command of the Amir, who is governor of the land of Egypt. Go to him, and make thy need known to him. Then, if he bids me, I will do for thee what thou requirest, and thou shalt return in peace to thy country with companions ». So the priest went from the patriarch's house to go to the Amir. Then some of the Gaianites met him, and took him to Theodore, the chief of the Phantasiasts, and told Theodore the cause which had brought the priest from his country. Therefore Theodore said to him : « I will do what thou needest for thee ». Then Theodore took a man of Maryûṭ, and ordained him bishop for him, and ordained two priests for him, and sent them away secretly to India. But after they had travelled twenty days, the guardians of the roads, who were employed by the Muslims, seized them, and sent them to the caliph, whose name was Abd al-Malik. The Indian priest, however, escaped, and returned to Egypt; but they brought the three others bound to Abd al-Malik. And when the caliph knew that they were of the land of Egypt, and from Maryûṭ, * and were travelling to a foreign country, he cut off their hands and feet, which he sent to Egypt, to Abd al-Azîz, to whom he wrote, reproaching him with incapacity, and saying : « It seems that thou knowest not what takes place in thine own country, namely that the patriarch of the Christians, who lives at Alexandria, has sent information of the affairs of Egypt to India. Now, when thou readest this letter, thou must inflict upon him two hundred stripes, and take from him one hundred thousand dinars, and send the money to us forthwith by the envoys who come to thee, without delay ». *P. 118

Now the patriarch, Abba Simon, was at that time at Ḥulwân, accompanied by a bishop. When the letters came to the Amir from his brother at the second hour of the night, he sent some Slavonians and summoned the holy Abba Simon, and his two spiritual sons, that is to say, his scribes. And the Amir said to him : « Fear God, and take heed of thyself, and let no lie come forth from thy mouth with regard to that on which I shall question thee ». So the patriarch answered : « I fear my God, and govern my soul in my conduct so that it may be saved by doing good at all times; and as for lies, not only to-day, but during my whole life I have despised them, for they come from Satan, the enemy of mankind. Thus I am ready either for death or life. With regard to the truth as far as I know it, I will tell it before God and thy authority ». Then the governor's anger blazed less furiously, and he said to him : « Didst thou indeed appoint a man to the bishopric of the Indians? » So he answered and said to him : « There came to me a priest from their country, and requested this thing of me, but I sent him away, telling him that, unless he would bring me an order from the Amir, I could not do this thing. Then I wrote for him to the secretaries, that they might inform thee of his business; and he left my house, when I was at Alexandria, and has not returned up to now ». When the Amir heard these words, he imagined that the blessed one was afraid of death, and for that reason concealed the truth; so he said to him : « Woe to thee! Behold the hands and feet of thy friends, which the caliph has sent to me. And he commands also that I take from thee one hundred thousand dinars, after inflicting upon thee five hundred stripes. Thou hast concealed the truth, therefore I will destroy thee, and kill the bishops with the sword,

Now this was at night. Then the holy man answered without fear and said to him : « It is the glory of the prince that he love justice, and the lips that are moved in hatred shall be despised. And now, as I think, if a voice came from heaven, bidding me deviate from the truth, I would say no otherwise. dispute with me? » Then the holy man Simon answered and said to him : « I am pressed on every side. Thou dost not accept the truth from me, but thou desirest to force me to accuse myself of that which I have not done. Yet by the love of God in thy heart grant me a delay of seven days, and thou shalt know all that took place according to the truth ». So he said to him : « Perchance thou desirest to flee or to kill thyself. But this monk, what is he in relation to thee? » The patriarch replied : « He is my son ». The Amir enquired : « Hast thou confidence in him? » He answered : « Yea he is as my own life ». So the Amir said to him : « As my brother did to the men who were taken while they were travelling to India, so I will do to thee if thou dost not tell me the truth ». The holy man answered and said : « Behold, we are before thee with God, therefore do whatever thou wilt. For I have told thee already what took place with me ». Then the Amir was silent for a time, and at length said : « I will grant thee a delay of three days. Therefore depart, and beware what thou doest, and perchance God will let know me the truth ».

So he went out from his presence and prayed to God humbly with tears, and begged him to show the Amir his innocence of the charge which he laid against him in this matter. And at sunset on the second day his spiritual son, the monk, looked towards the river bank, and saw walking there that black Indian priest and monk, who had come to Abba Simon and asked him to ordain a bishop for him, and who did not know anything of what had happened since then, because he had been a fugitive. So he went to that Indian, and grasped him and brought him to the holy patriarch, and said to him : « O my father, God has accepted thy prayer, and exposed the unjust treatment that we suffered ». And he made known to the patriarch that he had taken the Indian priest, and he brought him in. And the Indian told Abba Simon what had taken place, and how Theodore the Gaianite had ordained for him a bishop and priests. So when the morning of the third day came, he took him to the Amir, guarding him and taking thought how to save him, and to save Theodore also from death. When the Amir saw him, he said to him : « Perchance thou wilt now tell the truth without lies ». So the holy Simon answered him, after adoring God upon his face, and said : « The authority of men comes from the authority of God, and he who exercises authority in this world must be long-suffering, and willing like God most high to grant respites with generosity. Now I desire that thou give the promise of God to me and to those present with me in regard to this occurrence, that thou wilt do them no harm, but wilt pardon them for God's sake; and then the truth shall be made known to thy lordship ». So he gave him his hand that he would do him no evil. Accordingly he brought before Abd al-Azîz the Indian priest, who made known to him all that had hap-

*P. 120 Abd * al-Malik, his brother, to inform him of what had happened and that the patriarch of the Christians in the city of Alexandria had nothing to do with this matter, but was innocent of it; and he praised him to the caliph, and recounted his goodness and uprightness and chastity. And Abd al-Azîz performed for Abba Simon what he had promised, by sparing for his sake Theodore and the Indian priest; for he had learnt that there was no deceit in him.

And after three years Abd al-Azîz dismissed the bishops to their sees, and commanded them to build two churches at Ḥulwân. And the bishops spent of their own means upon the building of them; and the governor deputed Gregory, bishop of Al-Kais, to superintend the building of them. Pharao did in his time; and there are many things which he did, but which this biography has no room to relate, for fear of making it too long.

Meanwhile this holy man Simon was striving all his life to prevent difficulties between the Christians and the Muslims, so that none might suffer loss through him. And through him the Lord used to show his wonders. He had an oeconomus whom he entrusted with the care of the diaconicon, and who was a priest, and in his charge was all that belonged to the church. And the patriarch used to exhort him at all times and say to him : « O priest Mennas, see that thou be not careless with regard to the church, in leaving in thy house a book or anything that belongs to it, for otherwise trouble will come upon thee ». But Mennas was not pleased with these warnings. And the Lord gave this priest no child, as he smote the firstborn of Egypt in ancient times; yet though he thought of repentance he was not converted. Then God sent down upon him suddenly a disease through which his tongue clove to his palate, and his reason left him, and he used to bite his tongue while he was sleeping upon his bed. And three men took him on account of what he did to himself, and carried him to his house. And the Father Simon, the patriarch, was troubled about him and about the property of the church, because it was in his charge, and no one besides him knew the amount of it. So he remained awake, and prayed the Lord Jesus Christ to raise Mennas up from this sickness for the sake of the church. Then when midnight came, news was brought to the Father Patriarch that the priest Mennas was near death. So he sent his son to him, and bade him ask his wife if he had said anything to her about the property of the church; but before the patriarch's messenger arrived at the house, there was heard the voice of one crying that the priest was dead. And when he expired, they dressed him in the priestly garments, and laid him on his bed, according to the custom of the Alexandrians, vested in his liturgical vestments. Therefore when the patriarch's son came to the house in which Mennas was laid out, with a great number of the clergy around him, because of his priestly office and his rank, the brother bent over him to kiss him. And the priest sat up and clasped his hands round his neck, and said : « God

Thereupon he said to him : « Be confident and of good courage, and be patient, O priest Mennas ». Then he answered and said to him : « Through the prayers of my Lord, the Father Patriarch Abba Simon, God has given me life a second time ». Then the brother called the clergy and the rest of those who were in the town, and made known to them that the priest Mennas had spoken; and the priest Mennas said to them as they stood astonished and amazed : « Verily I died like all men who die, and two shining men led me before the throne of Christ, the great and mighty King; and I saw the fathers and patriarchs in their ranks, beginning with the Father Isaac back to the Evangelist Saint Mark. And they reproved me saying : Why didst thou hide the property of the church and all that belongs to it from our successor Abba Simon? Then I was placed before Christ the King, and he said : Take him into outer darkness. And while they were dragging me away, the holy patriarchs prostrated themselves before the Lord Christ, saying with supplications : Have pity on our son, this servant, and release him this time, because he has not given an account of the property of the Church, and this our brother Simon is praying for him. Therefore Christ commanded that I should be brought back a second time, and he said to me : Thus thou diest and art worthy of death, but for the sake of our chosen one and vicar, Simon, I release thee this time. Yet if thou repentest not and takest not heed to thyself, thou shalt return hither, and I will accept no prayers on thy behalf ». Then Mennas arose and stood upright, and he had recovered from his sickness. Afterwards he brought forth all the property of the church, and delivered it to the holy Father Abba Simon; and the Father Patriarch delivered it to his spiritual son. And Mennas remained with him to the time of his death in the fear of God. And all the people glorified God, the doer of wonders among his saints, on account of this great miracle.

Then the Father Patriarch, Abba Simon, chose spiritual men, brilliant in their deeds, deeply learned in the scriptures and in wisdom and sciences, and ordained them bishops over every place. And the first of these sons of his was the Father Abba Zacharias, bishop of the city of Sakhâ; and he made Abba Ptolemy, the spiritual brother who was his brother in the monastic life, bishop over the see of Upper Manûf. And there are many others whose names are forgotten. These he ordained and distributed the dioceses among them that they might feed the reasonable sheep. And he remained patriarch nine years and a half. Then he fell ill on the day of Pentecost, and recognised that it was a mortal sickness. So he said to his son: « Let us travel to the holy valley, Wadî Habîb, that I may receive the blessing of the holy fathers and the monks; for I shall not see them again after this time in the body ». So he went down from Ḥulwân, for he had gone thither from Alexandria for the sake of the bishops, until he had dismissed them to their dioceses. And he went down to Wadî Habîb, and received Here[1] ends the sixteenth chapter wherein the History of the Fathers is completed, as far as the life of Abba Simon, the forty-second patriarch. May God grant us the blessing of their prayers! Hereafter will follow that which we have translated from the documents in the Monastery of Saint Macarius, namely the history of ten patriarchs, from Michael[2] the Last to Sinuthius the First. We also translated in this monastery the lives of nine other patriarchs, in the year 796 of the Martyrs. This is written by Apacyrus, the deacon, and Michael, son of Apater, of Damanhûr. Through the grace of God, which enabled us to find the histories in the Monastery of Saint Macarius, with the help of the brother Theodore, the steward, son of Paul, on Sunday the 6th of Ba'ûnah, in the year 797 of the Righteous Martyrs. CHAPTER XVII

ALEXANDER II, THE FORTY-THIRD PATRIARCH. A. D. 705-730.

We must now record the events which took place after the death of the glorious, venerable, and blessed father, the good shepherd Abba Simon, who heard from the Lord Jesus Christ the words : « [1] O thou faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over little, I will set thee over much. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord ». When his death was made known to the Amir
*P. 123 Abd * al-Azîz and to the scribes at Miṣr, these latter were afflicted with grief and sadness because all the Christians had lost their shepherd, at a time of difficulty and trials, caused by the civil governors. But the Lord Christ did not cease to govern the Church. And Athanasius, the believer, was president of the Divân; and he protected the interests of the churches. On this occasion he and the scribes went to the Amir with one consent, and said to him : « The property of the Church at Alexandria obliges her to pay a heavy tax. Therefore we pray thee to despatch the bishop Gregory to Alexandria, to watch over the possessions of the Church and everything connected with it. So may God lengthen thy life, O Amir! » Then Abd al-Azîz consented to what Athanasius asked for, and despatched Gregory, bishop of Al-Kais, to Alexandria, and gave him authority over the property of the churches and the establishment of the patriarch, with free power of administration; and accordingly he wrote a decree for him to that effect. So Gregory took the decree and departed. And they began to take thought as to whom they should promote to be patriarch, in accordance with their desire for a man known for wisdom and learning. So they waited three years in this state, until it was the Lord's will; and at length the heart of the civil governors was well disposed in this matter, after much supplication. Then by the will of God, the Lord Jesus Christ, who knows whom he will choose from among the pure and chaste and clean of heart, they brought forward the priest Alexander from the Monastery of Az-Zajâj. He was a monk, a virgin, humble, without defect, learned in the Scriptures from his youth. And they brought Alexander to the Amir, who saw the grace in his face, and so allowed them by the will of God to promote him to the patriarchal office.

فاتفق الشعب الارثدكسى بحضور جماعة من الاساقفة والكهنة وكتاب[1] الديوان فكرزوا الاب الاكسندروس بطركًا فى يوم عيد القديس مارى مرقس الذى هو اخر برمودة سنة اربع مائة وعشرين لديقلاديانوس[2] ونال كورة مصر مسرّة عظيمة وخاصّة[3] الارثدكسيين لكون البيعة كانت معطلة ثلث سنين وكانوا فيها كاليتامى وكان الرب مع الاب الاكسندروس يسهل جميع اموره لتواضعه[4] وعفّته واتّكاله على الرب وحده[5] مدبّره فلما مضت ايام يسيرة وهو مستريح اثار الشطيان شعثًا على الاساقفة مما نذكره كان لعبد العزيز ملك مصر ولد[6] اكبر اولاده يسمّى الاصبغ وكان يظن انه يجلس عوض ابيه اذا توفى[7] فولاه على جميع الكورة واليًا ومستخرجًا وكان[8] جميع الطقوس سامعين له بخوف لاجل انه ولد الامير ولما دفع له من السلطان وكان مبغضًا للنصارى سفاك[9] الدماء رجل سوء كالسبع[10] الضارى ثم

So the orthodox laity agreed together, in the presence of an assemblage of bishops and priests and the secretaries of the divan. Then the Father Alexander was consecrated patriarch on the festival of the holy Saint Mark, namely the last day of Barmudah, in the year 420 of Diocletian. And the land of Egypt rejoiced greatly, and especially the orthodox, because the Church had been left in solitude three years, and they were therein like orphans. And the Lord was with the Father Alexander, making all his affairs easy, on account of his humility and chastity and trust in the Lord alone as his ruler. Then when a short time had passed, during which he remained in peace, Satan stirred up strife against the bishops, as we will relate.

Abd al-Azîz, the governor of Egypt, had a son, the eldest of his sons, called Al-Aṣbagh, and he thought that he would sit in the seat of government in his father's room when he died. So he made him ruler over the whole country as wâli and receiver of the revenue, and all ranks obeyed him with fear, because he was the Amir's son, and because of the authority which he had given him. Now Al-Aṣbagh was a hater of the Christians, a shedder of blood, a wicked man, like a fierce lion. At that time a deacon, named Benjamin, became attached to him and grew intimate with him; and Al-Aṣbagh loved him more than all his companions. And he treacherously revealed to Al-Aṣbagh the secrets of the Christians, and even expounded the Gospel to him in Arabic as well as the books of alchemy. For Al-Aṣbagh sought out books that they might be read to him, and so for instance he read the Festal Epistles, in order that he might see whether the Muslims were insulted therein or not. And he did not shrink from any cruelty that he could inflict upon the Christians. For as the damned heretics were in the habit of calumniating the Christian monks and saying that they did nothing but eat and drink, he sent one of his trusted friends, named Yezîd, accompanied by another, and mutilated all the monks in all the provinces and in Wadî Habîb and on Mount Jarâd and in other places. And he laid a poll-tax upon them of one dinar from each individual, and commanded that they should make no more monks after those whom he mutilated. Now this tax of the infidel Al-Aṣbagh was the first poll-tax paid by the monks.

After this, Al-Aṣbagh compelled the bishops of the provinces to furnish a sum of two thousand dinars besides the taxes on their lands, and this sum they paid every year. And he acted proudly, and compelled the people to pray as he bade them. And Benjamin, the monk and deacon, was a worse enemy to the Christians than any other, and excited his friend to every kind of persecution. So he forced many persons to become Muslims, among them being Peter, governor of Upper Egypt, and his brother Theodore, and the son of Theophanes, governor of Maryûṭ, and a body of priests and laymen not to be numbered on account of their multitude. But the Lord Jesus Christ did not long respite Al-Aṣbagh, and in a short time hurried him out of the world, because he hated the Christian people. This took place as follows. On the Saturday of Light he entered into the Monastery of Ḥulwan, and looked at the pictures being carried in procession according to the rule. And there was a picture of our Pure Lady Mary and of the Lord Christ in her lap; so when he looked at it and considered it, he said to the bishops and to several people who were with him : « Who is represented in this picture? » They answered : « This is Mary, the mother of Christ ». Then he was moved with hatred against her, and filled his mouth with saliva, and spat in her face, saying : « If I find an opportunity, I will root out the Christians from this land. Who is Christ that you worship him as a God? » And that night God sent down vengeance upon him. For in the morning he came to his father, and found him sitting, surrounded by a body of Muslims and Christians. And the day was Easter Sunday. So Al-Aṣbagh sat down and said to his father : « O my Lord, the devils have chastised me this night ». His father said to him : « How,

And I asked one in a low voice : Who is this who has taken the government of the land of Egypt from my father? He said to me : I have never known him till now. So I asked him in the dream : And who is he? Then he answered and said : This is Jesus Christ, the King of the Christians, who is more glorious and higher than all the kings of the earth. This is he whom thou didst mock, and in whose face thou didst spit. He shows thee thy weakness in this dream, thou wretched one, together with thy father; and he shows thee his glory and majesty ». And while he was saying this to me, behold, one of those bearing weapons came to me, I being naked, and he struck me with a spear in my side, and did not take it out again until I had given up my spirit to them; and they were the devils who mocked me ». When his father heard this tale he was very sad. And the young man was immediately seized with a violent fever, and was carried away forthwith; and they laid him upon his bed, and he did not open his mouth after that, nor did he eat or drink. So at the second hour of the night he died. And he was buried; and none could comfort his father because of him. And after forty days his father also died, according to the dream which his unbelieving son had seen.

When these things had happened, Athanasius, the believer and lover of Christ, went with his sons to the sovereign prince Abd al-Malik at Damascus. But Abd al-Malik arrested Athanasius there, and called him to account, and took from him all the gains that he had acquired in Egypt since the collection of the taxes had been left to him. Then the prince sent one of his sons, named Abd Allah, to govern the land of Egypt; and when he came to Egypt, he also did evil deeds; and all the officials feared him on account of the deeds to which Satan tempted him. For he made instruments with which to torture the people, and was like a fierce wild beast; so that often when he sat at table men were put to death in his presence, and perchance their blood spurted out into the dish from which he was eating, and he took pleasure in that. In those days the blessed Alexander went forth, and travelled to Miṣr to salute Abd Allah, according to the custom among patriarchs and governors. But when Abd Allah saw him, he said : « What is this man? » They replied : « This is the father and patriarch of all the Christians ». So he took him, and gave him over to one of his chamberlains, to whom he said : « Humiliate him in whatever way thou wilt, until he shall pay three thousand dinars ». So he took him, and he remained with him three days. And the Christians continued to petition the governor that he would remit part of what he had said, but he would not. And all the people in the country were in great distress on this account; and great fear fell upon the bishops and monks on account of the money which he tried to extort from the patriarch. So when George the deacon, a native of Dimru, saw this, that Abd Allah would not set the patriarch free until he had received the money, he went to him and said to him : « O our Lord, dost thou desire the life of the patriarch or money? » He answered : « I wish for the money ». So the deacon George said to him : « Trust me with him for the space of two months, that I may go down with him to the North, to beg for him from the officials and Christians, and I will pay thee for him three thousand dinars ». So the governor gave the patriarch up to him, and he went round the cities and villages with him, and visited those who believed in Christ, until he had collected the money and brought it to Misr. And he used to assemble to himself the bishops and principal men and monks, and then mock them, and speak proudly with hard words, saying to them : « You are to me like the Romans, and if a man slays one of you, God will pardon him, because you are the enemies of God ». And when he received from the people the taxes which they were accustomed to pay, he demanded the double amount from them, requiring a dinar and two thirds from those who were bound to pay one dinar, so that many churches were ruined for that cause; for he loved money greatly.

Then Abd Allah commanded that of the youths of his country all those should be gathered together that were twenty years old or under. So they went and assembled together; and the leaders whom he appointed were two men, friends of his, named Aṣim and Yazîd, and with them a body of officials; and they brought down great trials upon the people, and many were killed on this account. And they branded the strangers whom they found, on their hands and foreheads, and sent them to places which they did not know. Thus there was trouble and confusion in the land. The governor also gave orders that no dead man should be buried until they had paid the poll-tax for him; and he appointed a man named Muḥammad over this business, so that even the indigent, who could not buy bread, were not buried when they died, except by his command. How great then were the sadness and misery and sighing in the provinces of Lower and Upper Egypt on account of the deeds of these men, until the Lord took vengeance suddenly on Abd Allah, after he had continued for two years to do such deeds! For the Lord took away the life of his father, Abd al-Malik, whose eldest son, named Al-Walîd, became ruler in his stead. When Al-Walîd took his seat on the throne of the empire, he began to remove the provincial governors, and to nominate others from among his friends. So he appointed as governor of Egypt one named Kurrah. But that infidel Abd Allah did not know of this change; and while he was sitting in his official residence, the governor appointed to replace him arrived unexpectedly, and took his seat in his place. Thus great ignominy and shame came to him on this account.

And Kurrah brought down great trials upon the friends of Abd Allah, both Christians and Muslims, and cast them into prisons where they remained for a year. And there was in his days a man of the orthodox faith, named John, a native of Damîrah, who had authority to command or forbid. But Kurrah caused trials among the churches and the monks, as shall be described.

Meanwhile the Roman monarchy was like a game for children. For when the Romans had deposed Justinian the prince, they made Leo their ruler in his place. But Leo was put to death before he had completed the third year of his reign; and after him reigned Apsimarus, who put many patricians to death at Constantinople; and he also killed the patriarch. When Apsimarus came to the throne, he released many captives from his country, and they returned to their own homes; and he provided each one with three dinars for the expenses of the journey. After him reigned Philippicus. Then after two years Anastasius was made prince of the Romans, and is still reigning. (N. B. dore; and there was great hostility between him and the Father Patriarch, Alexander. For when Kurrah came to Miṣr, the Father Patriarch went according to the custom to congratulate him on becoming governor, and to salute him. But Kurrah arrested him on his arrival, and said to him : « Thou must pay me a sum equal to that which Abd Allah, son of Abd al-Malik, took from thee ». The Father Patriarch said to him : « Our Law bids us not to lay up treasure and not to multiply gold or silver, but that we spend something day by day on account of what we need for daily use and for the poor and the needy. Abd Allah acted as he did towards me only through the calumnies of evil men, because of which he treated me unjustly and exacted three thousand dinars from me. But he found none of that money in my possession, so that he sent me out into the country like a beggar asking alms, until God gave me what I needed; and even now I owe five hundred dinars. So whence shall I get anything? » Then the Amir said to him : « Wilt thou swear to me then that thou hast no gold? » The patriarch answered : « God has commanded us not to swear at all. Believe me therefore now that the taxes on my property which must be paid are beyond my means, and God knows that I have no gold ». Then the Amir said : « These words will not avail. If thou must sell thine own flesh, thou must pay me three thousand dinars, and if not, thou shalt not escape from my hand ». So when he saw that he could not escape from him, he begged him to let him travel to Upper Egypt, and whatever God allowed him to collect by the alms of the people he would send it to him. Then Kurrah released him, and he went up to Upper Egypt, and went round the cities and villages, and begged. And the Lord Jesus Christ healed many sick persons by his prayers, and every one rejoiced in him, saying : « Since the time of the Father Benjamin we have not seen a patriarch in Upper Egypt until this father ». But he suffered fatigue and trouble and the miseries of travel, and at last Satan, who hates the good, did this thing of which an account follows. There was a hermit, named Petubastes, who dwelt on a rock with two monks, his sons. One day their father, the hermit, bade them clean out for him a place away from the rock; and while they were clearing it and digging, they found five brazen pots full of money in Roman coin. So they hid one of the pots, and showed the other four to the hermit. So the old man said to them in his simplicity : « Is this all that you found? » And when they said that it was all, he was glad at that. Then he said to them : « The Lord has disposed this money for the Father Patriarch, because he is required to pay what he does not possess ». Afterwards he sent to the patriarch's steward, whose name was George the monk, and to his scribe, and summoned them both, and delivered to them the four pots, and said to them : « Take these and give them to the governor for the Father Alexander, the patriarch ». So they took the pots and went away and buried them dishonestly. And the Father Patriarch was absent collecting money in Upper Egypt. So the monks, the sons of the hermit, took the pot of money, and divided it between themselves, and began to act impiously; for they abandoned the monastic life, and bought fine raiment and maidservants. So the governor of the town and the clerk seized one of them and said to him : « Whence hast thou this money? » And when he was chastised, and the stripes caused him anguish, he said to them : « Promise me that you will do me no hurt, and I will make everything known to you ». So they promised him, and he informed them of the affair of the five pots, and that he and his comrade had taken one of them, and that the other four pots were in the possession of the patriarch's steward and scribe. Then they at once informed Kurrah of this, and he commanded that the patriarchal residence should be shut, and all the vessels and gold and silver and books and cattle in it seized. And he brought down great trials upon the friends of the patriarch, and took the four pots of money, besides the vessels of the church and the goods found in the patriarchal residence, and he sent to Upper Egypt, and summoned the patriarch, and was minded to slay him because he had sworn that there was no gold in his possession. And when he took from them the four pots, all the friends of the patriarch fled like the apostles at that time. Then when they brought the patriarch before Kurrah, he gnashed his teeth upon him and wished to slay him, but the Lord restrained him; so he loaded him with iron fetters, and cast him into prison, where he remained seven days. Then after that he compelled him to pay the three thousand dinars, and great trouble and distress came upon him, until one thousand dinars were paid to him after two years; and many trials came to the holy father, but he endured them patiently. Afterwards wicked people went and accused him falsely of having men in his house, who coined dinars, and alleged that he possessed a die for stamping coin. And while he was sitting at the ninth hour of the day, on a certain day, breaking his fast, and ignorant of what was to happen, before he knew anything, they had surrounded the patriarchal residence, and the people of the city of Alexandria with the town-clerk, by command of Kurrah, had seized the patriarch and his companions; and they threw him to the ground, and beat his companions, who were tortured till their blood flowed on the ground, and they almost died by the torture; and after all they found what they had accused him of to be false. And they did not cease from these persecutions till the second day of Amshir, in the year 430 of Diocletian.

Then after these persecutions which the father suffered, the people and clergy of Alexandria rose against him, and demanded that he should pay them some of the dues and church-rates on the third day of the Feast of Easter, but he had nothing to give them. And he said to them : « O brethren, you have seen how we have been robbed of all the property of the church, even of the cups in which the Pure Blood is offered; so that we have been forced to make chalices of glass and patens of wood instead of the gold and silver vessels, because Kurrah has robbed us of them ». But they reviled him with many hard words, while he patiently endured their abuse, and prayed to the Lord Christ, the chief shepherd, that he would receive his people from him and grant them salvation.

And the Lord Jesus Christ did in his days wonderful things, because he cares for the salvation of each one among men. For there was a man named John, an official, to whom God gave favour with the governors. So he went to Kurrah and said to him : « It is right that thou shouldst know that the taxes weigh heavily upon the monks and bishops in every place. Here then is an easy matter, for some of them are rich; while others have not the means of nourishment; and we know the state of all the Christians; if therefore thou thinkest fit to set me over their affairs, I will collect the taxes ». So he set him over the bishops and monks. And when Kurrah gave him authority, he said to him : « There are among them some who do not believe in the faith of the Coptic Christians, and yet will not pray with the Muslims. What then thinkest thou that I should do to them? » The governor answered : « Do to them according to the law of the Christians, and take a double poll-tax from them ». Accordingly John went out from before him, by the dispensation of God, and went first to the diocese of Ṣâ, which was his own diocese, where there were certain heretics, Gaianites and Schematics, living without the blessing of God. He therefore put a stop to their foul heresy, and baptized them in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, enlightening them with the illumination of baptism; and their souls were filled with joy. Then John went to Al-Munâ, where the bishop of the diocese was Abba Hor, and baptized the monks there, after they had abjured their heresy; and thus the Gaianites and the Barsanuphians, who were there, were led by him into communion with the orthodox. When he left that place, he journeyed to Wadî Habîb, where also the heresy of the Gaianites had existed during a hundred and seventy years, from the time of the schism caused by Julian; and he brought them also back to the orthodox faith. Thus he united all the churches in one body by the grace of the Lord Christ who helped him; not only these, but those in every place in which he found roots of bitterness, that is to say, foul heresies among the monks or others. For in the city of Banâ and Buṣir and Samannûd and the neighbourhood, and at Rosetta and Damietta, the Lord rooted out their false principles and cast them away; and he united the whole land of Egypt in one faith with true agreement, and brought all the foul heresies to nought.

And the Amir Kurrah was a great lover of money; and whenever an official died, he seized all his goods. Thus on the death of the chief of the Divân of Alexandria, and of Apacyrus of Tinnîs, who was a clerk, and of an innumerable multitude of officials at Miṣr, he confiscated their property; and he even took away the endowments of the bishops. By these means he added a hundred thousand dinars to the established revenue of the country. And men began to flee from place to place with their wives and children, but no place would harbour them because of the troubles and the exaction of taxes; and his tyranny was greater than that of any of his predecessors.

Then Kurrah appointed a man, named Abd al-Azîz, of the city of Sakhâ, who collected the fugitives from every place, and brought them back and bound them and punished them, and sent everyone to his own place; and the people endured heavy trials. After this, God sent a great plague upon Egypt, and the number of those who died daily was not known; but the majority of those who died were Muslims. At last the plague entered the house of Kurrah, and his wives and his pages died; and he fled from place to place in fear of death, until he finished the term allotted to him, and then died suddenly a painful death.

piness. So the bishops of the East assembled in order to appoint his successor; but their prince, whose name was Al-Walîd, would not allow them to do this. For he said : « I will not permit a patriarch to be appointed in my days ». And the bishops were sad because of this; and therefore they took a God-fearing bishop, filled with the grace of the Holy Ghost, named Elias, and seated him upon the throne in the church of Antioch. And he wrote a synodical letter according to the law of the ancient canons, and despatched it by a bishop, named Stephen, to the Father Patriarch Alexander, because of the agreement between the two prelates. But the holy Alexander was visiting various places, so the bishop found him in Wadî Habîb, and delivered to him the synodical letter from the bishop Abba Elias, whom they had seated on the throne of Antioch. And Alexander found the letter in accordance with the orthodox faith, and therefore he accepted it with joy, and summoned the chief men of the provinces, and made known to them what had happened in the East, and how the prince had forbidden the faithful to appoint a patriarch, but that the bishops had given the late patriarch a successor, so that he might consecrate the bishops until the season of wrath should cease. And a similar occurrence had happened in the time of Gregory Theologus and our Father Theophilus with the Arians and Acacians, and the distress lasted until they called the aforesaid Gregory to Constantinople, and the church was delivered

And when Theodore undertook the government of Alexandria in the reign of Al-Walîd and in the days of the Father Alexander, there was there a physician, a native of the city, named Onopes, which means Ass's face. When this man gained influence, he begged the Amir to command Theodore to appoint him patriarch of Alexandria; and he was a Roman, and a blasphemous Chalcedonian. The Amir accepted his petition; and a certain clerk named Anastasius, a native of Alexandria, gave to the Amir a thousand dinars, and so induced him to establish this false Chalcedonian patriarch in the city of Alexandria. And he opposed the right faith and derided Abba Alexander, especially when he was enduring trials at that time. After that the people wished to depose the Chalcedonian, and rose against him; so he fled, and went to the Father Alexander, and prayed him humbly, and begged to be excused for what he had endured through him, and requested him to receive him into the orthodox faith. Therefore Alexander received him with Christian charity, and obeyed the commandments of God, who says [1] : « If thou seest the ass of thine enemy lying under his burden, turn not from him until thou hast raised him up ». And he did not cease to hold the orthodox faith.

Then there arose trials in the Church, and a wicked edict was issued that the coloured pillars and the marble which were in the churches should be taken away, and they were all carried off. And the Father Patriarch was sad for the sake of his church, because it became a ruin through that which was done with him. But in spite of this he gave thanks to God, and was bravely patient.

At that time two serious disasters happened, in the year 431 of Diocletian, in the 13th year of the Indiction, on account of our sins and our evil deeds. For after the death of Kurrah, Al-Walîd sent to Egypt as his successor a governor named Usâmah. This man, when he arrived at Al-Fusṭâṭ, demanded a description of the boundaries of all the provinces, and wrote it down in Arabic; and he was a man of great intelligence. Then, when he had begun this, there came a great dearth, the like of which had not been heard of since the earliest ages; and more died in that dearth than had died in the plague, for all the rich and the poor were threatened with death. Afterwards a great abundance came, till wheat sank to twenty-five ardebbs for one dinar. But after a short time the plague returned, and destroyed the people; and if the Lord had not taken pity on those that remained of them on the earth, not one would have survived.

And the Amir continued to do evil, while all the Muslims and Christians feared him. For he commanded that no one should lodge a stranger in the churches or at inns or on the wharfs, and the people were afraid of him and drove out the strangers that were in their houses. And he commanded the monks not to make monks of those who came to them. Then he mutilated the monks, and branded each one of them on his left hand, with a branding iron in the form of a ring, that he might be known; adding the name of his church and his monastery, without a cross, and with the date according to the era of Islam. Thus there was, in the year 96 of the Hegira, trouble among the monks, and oppression of the faithful. If they discovered a fugitive or one that had not been marked, they brought him to the Amir, who ordered that one of his limbs should be cut off, so that he was lame for life; and the number could not be counted of those whom he maimed for this cause And he shaved off the beards of many, and slew a great multitude, and put out the eyes of many without mercy, and killed many under punishment with scourges. And out of love for money he commanded the governors to put the people to death, and bring him their money; and he wrote to them, saying : « I have delivered up to you the lives of the people, therefore collect all the wealth that you can, from bishops or monks or churches or any of the people, and bring stuffs and money and cattle and all that you find belonging to them, and respect no one. And whatever place you visit, pillage it ». Accordingly the officials laid the country waste, and carried off the columns and the woodwork, and sold what was worth ten dinars for one dinar, until silver sank to thirty-five dirhems for a dinar, and wheat to forty ardebbs for a dinar, and wine to forty wineskins for a dinar, and oil to a hundred kists for a dinar. And everyone who possessed anything was afraid to show it, lest he should be put to the torture; and through anguish and distress men were minded to sell their own children. Yet when the Amir was informed of these things, his heart was not softened, and he had no mercy, but increased in his wickedness. For he wrote and said : « Wherever a man is found walking, or passing from one place to another, or disembarking from a boat, or embarking, without a passport, he shall be arrested, and the contents of the boat confiscated, and the boat burnt ». And if any Romans were found on the river, they were brought to him; and some of them he slew, and others he impaled, and the hands and feet of some he cut off. At last the roads were made impassable, and no man could travel or sell or buy. The fruits of the vineyards were wasted, and there was no one to buy them for a single dirhem, because their owners remained within their houses for two months, awaiting the passport to release them thence. If a mouse ate a man's passport, or if it were injured by water or fire or any accident, whether part or the whole of it remained to his possession, if its lettering were damaged, it could not be changed for a new one until he paid five dinars as a fee for it, and then it could be changed for him.

Now there was a poor widow who received a passport for her son, who was her only one and fatherless, and to whose labour she trusted for her sustenance. So she departed from Alexandria to go to Aghrawah. But when the young man went out to the river to drink water, a crocodile devoured him with the passport which was fastened to him. And his mother wept and mourned for him, and then returned to Alexandria, where she informed the unbelieving Amir of what had happened to her; but he had no pity on her, and kept her prisoner until she paid ten dinars for the passport, because she had entered the city without a passport. And she sold her garments and all that she had, and went about begging, until she had paid the ten dinars. And Satan, whom the Amir resembled in heart, suggested evil to him all day long. After this he sent his officers to inquire into the state of the monasteries, and found there many monks who had no mark of a ring on their hands; so some of them were beheaded, and some died under the lash. Then he nailed up the door of their church with iron nails, and demanded of them a thousand dinars, and assembled the superiors of the monks, and tortured them, and required a dinar from each one of them. And he said :

« If you do not pay this, I will destroy the churches, and turn them into ruins, and make you serve on board the ships of the fleet ». So the seniors of the monks were troubled; and they longed for death, and knew not what to do, and could only assemble in the churches, and pray, and humbly entreat the Lord Christ in grief and sadness that he would have pity on them. At last the gracious and merciful God heard their supplication, and delivered them suddenly; for Sulaiman, son of Abd al-Malik, who was at that time the sovereign prince, died and was succeeded by Omar, son of Abd al-Azìz who had been governor of Egypt. And by the will of the merciful God, Omar at once sent a governor to Egypt, who fastened a mass of iron to the feet of Usâmah, the evil one, and a block of wood to his hands, and put him in prison; and he was kept in darkness until he should make up his mind concerning him. Then he took him, and brought him out from Alexandria to Miṣr. But God took away his life on the way in a grievous and painful manner, as he deserved.

Yet this Omar, son of Abd al-Azìz, though he did much good before men, acted ill before God. He commanded that there should be no taxes upon the property of the church and the bishops, and began to set the churches and bishops free from the impost on land; and he abolished the new taxes, and rebuilt the ruined cities; and the Christians were in security and prosperity.

and so were the churches. But after that be began to do evil; for he wrote a letter charged with sadness to Egypt, in which were written the following words : « Omar commands saying, Those who wish to remain as they are, and in their own country, must follow the religion of Muḥammad as I do; but let those who do not wish to do so, go forth from my dominions ». Then the Christians gave him all the money that they could, and trusted in God, and rendered service to the Muslims, and became an example to many. For the Christians were oppressed by the governors and the local authorities and the Muslims in every place, the old and the young, the rich and the poor among them; and Omar commanded that the poll-tax should be taken from all men who would not become Muslims, even in cases where it was not customary to take it. But God did not long respite him, but destroyed him swiftly, and granted him the government no longer, because he was like Antichrist.

Then Yezîd reigned after him; but we have no wish to relate nor describe what happened in his days, on account of the miseries and trials; for he walked in the path of Satan, and deviated from the paths of God. As soon as he undertook the government, he restored the taxes of which Omar had relieved the churches and bishops for one year; and he required great sums of money from the people, so that everyone was distressed in his dominions. And he was not satisfied with this only, but he even issued orders that the crosses should be broken in every place, and that the pictures which were in the churches should be removed. For he commanded this, but the Lord Christ destroyed him for this reason, and took his soul, after he had endured before his death many sufferings. And the time during which he reigned was two years and four months.

And after him reigned Hishâm his brother, who was a God-fearing man according to the method of Islam, and loved all men; and he became the deliverer of the orthodox. For when he learnt that we Christians had had no patriarch in the East since Julian, the late patriarch of Antioch, in whose stead the bishop Elias had taken his seat, and that Elias also had died, he took a man named Athanasius, full of every spiritual grace, who also was a bishop, and gave him the patriarchate of Antioch. So the bishops laid their hands upon him in turn, and made him patriarch. This Athanasius wrote a synodical letter with learning and great humility to the blessed Father Patriarch Alexander, saying : « Verily I am unworthy of this degree on account of my sins; yet I have not been promoted by my own will, but by that of the prince ». For he had known him before this time. So Alexander received the letter with joy, and then wrote an answer to it, asserting the unity of the faith, and containing good wishes and salutations. At the end he wrote thus : « We bless the prince Hishâm, and pray that he may enjoy a reign of many years, and overcome his enemies, so that he may do that which is right before the Lord ». And he dismissed the envoys in peace.

After this, Hishâm wrote to Egypt, commanding that a receipt in his name should be given to everyone who paid the taxes, so that none might be unfairly treated, and that there might be no injustice in his dominions. So God gave him a prosperous reign, and he continued to rule for twenty-two years; and no war continued against him, but everyone that rose up against him was delivered by God into his hands, through the prayers of the two glorious patriarchs, Alexander at Alexandria and Athanasius at Antioch. Now the orthodox church at Damascus was adjoining the palace in which Hishâm resided. Then he commanded that the patriarch should build his house next to the prince's reception-hall, because of his great love for him, so that he might hear him pray and read. For he often used to say to him : « When thou beginnest to pray at night I receive great comfort, and I cease to trouble about the affairs of the empire, and then sleep comes to me restfully ». And Hishâm loved Athanasius greatly for that reason; and he gave great gifts to the churches and the Christians. And there was at his court a Muslim who greatly loved the orthodox churches, and he was named Ubaid Allah. And when the prince Hishâm saw him act so, he rejoiced greatly, and made him governor of Egypt, and commanded him to act with kindness towards all baptised Christians. When Ubaid Allah came to Egypt, he commanded that the people and the cattle should be numbered, and the lands and vineyards measured with measuring lines, and accordingly this was done; also that a leaden badge should be placed on the neck of every man, from the youth of twenty to those who were a hundred years old; and he had them numbered, and wrote down the names of all of them, and the number of their beasts, young and old, and an account of the bad lands, difficult of cultivation, which produce rushes and thorns. And he set up milestones in the midst of the enclosed lands, at the boundaries and on the roads, throughout the land of Egypt; and he doubled the taxes.

So after Ubaid Allah had accomplished all that we have related, and had committed much injustice which we have not related, when he came to Al-Fusṭâṭ, he went to the city of Memphis and remained there four months. And he commanded that the chief men of the towns should assemble at Memphis. And he had the mark of a lion put on the hands of the Christians, according to the words of the Book, which John the Son of Thunder uttered, saying[1] : « None shall sell or buy except those upon whose hand is the mark of the lion ». * Then, when he had accomplished this, he wrote to the provinces of Egypt, saying thus : « If anyone is found in any place without the mark on his hand, his hand shall be cut off, and he shall be heavily fined, because he has disobeyed the commands of the prince and acted rebelliously towards him ». Now he had two sons, one of whom he despatched to the South, and the other to the North, and there was great distress and perturbation in all the land of Egypt. Then Ubaid Allah arrived at Al-Gizah, and built a large house for himself there; and he wrote to the provinces of Egypt, commanding that a body of men should be collected for him, that he might set them to work as long as he wished. And he built at Al-Fusṭâṭ, until the men perished through fatigue from the great labours which he imposed upon them. In consequence of these things, when the forced labours and the payment of the taxes which he had doubled became grievous, war broke out between the Christians and Muslims, so that much blood was shed in the land of Egypt between the two factions, first of all in the city of Banâ and the city of Ṣâ and the city of Samannûd and their neighbourhood, and in many places in Lower Egypt; and there was likewise fighting on the roads and mountains and by the canals; but if we were to relate the history of it the account would be too long. When the governor of Alexandria entered that city to mark the people, he seized the patriarch in order to brand him, but he refused to be so treated. Yet the governor would not release him, and, though the patriarch requested to be allowed to go to the prince, would not consent to that. Then after a time he sent the patriarch to Misr, with a troop of soldiers who were to bring him to Ubaid Allah; and accordingly, when he appeared before him, he made known to him the cause of his arrival. But Ubaid Allah would not let him go without branding him. Therefore when the Father Patriarch Alexander saw that he could not escape, he said to Ubaid Allah, the Amir : « I pray thee to grant me a delay of three days ». So he consented to this, and granted him the respite. Then the patriarch entered his private chamber, and prayed the Lord not to suffer him to be branded, but to remove him from this world speedily; and when God saw the thoughts of his servant that they were good, he visited him; and accordingly he fell sick on the third day, and the sickness increased each day upon him. When he knew that the Lord Christ had heard him and received his prayer, he sent trustworthy persons and certain chiefs of the orthodox, his children, to Ubaid Allah, to beg him to release him, that he might depart to his see before his death. But he would not allow him, suspecting that this was a ruse, and that he was not sick. So when four days had passed, the father said to the brethren : « Prepare the boat at sunset that we may depart, for to-morrow the Lord Jesus Christ will visit me ». Accordingly they departed; but not one of the bishops was with him, except Abba Shamul, bishop of Wasîm. Then when they had descended the river in their flight, they reached Tarnûṭ by the morning; and at that hour the blessed Alexander went to his rest at that place. When Ubaid Allah learnt that the patriarch had escaped without leave, he despatched an officer to bring him back with his companions; but when he came up with them and took them into custody to bring them back in wrath, he found that the Father had gone to his rest. So he left him alone, but seized Abba Shamul, and conducted him to Ubaid Allah, who said : « The truth is that thou didst induce him to flee, therefore thou must pay a thousand dinars to the government treasury ». But Abba Shamul was poor, in want of sustenance from day to day, and went thinly clad; and he was sweet of countenance and virtuous in conduct; and he used to exhort sinners, and they listened to him; and likewise he confirmed those who were weak in the orthodox faith. So he swore to the Amir that he could not pay a single dinar, and did not possess one; but he would not accept this excuse, and gave him up to two officers of police. Then when those two Muslims, whose names we will not record, had taken him, they gave him up to some Berbers, like lions in their actions, who hauled and dragged him away through the midst of Misr, until they brought him to the door of the church of Saint George, trailing him along. And there was there a great crowd assembled of sellers and buyers; and many began to run after him through Misr. And they demanded a thousand dinars of him in spite of the exiguity of his possessions; and they began to torture him that day without mercy, and stripped him of his garment, and clothed him in a hair-cloth, and hung him up by his arms, thinly clad as he was, while all the people looked on, and scourged him with whips of cowhide until his blood ran on the ground. And the multitude beheld him and what befell him at the hands of the police; but they continued for a week to torture him in this way until the people collected for him three hundred dinars. But when there came down some of the friends of Ubaid Allah to interview him, while the chiefs of the Christians said to them : « He is near death, and he is guiltless of any fault in this matter according to what we know », then upon that they released him after severe torments, for he was near death.

Thus when the Father Alexander, a saint indeed, went to his rest in a good old age, great sadness fell upon the Christians because of his death. For he had remained for twenty-four years and a half upon the throne. And there were during the days of his life certain very holy men in the land of Egypt, in the deserts and monasteries, who wearied themselves in the service of God, and by whom wonders and signs were manifested. For there was a man, who was a priest and at the same time a fisherman, in the province of Isnâ, who laboured with the nets, while he followed the rule of the monastic life. And after a long time he departed and built a monastery on the mountain, and many became monks with him there; and they lived in virtue and poverty. And the fame of that old man went forth through the outer country; and his name was Matthew, and he was a native of Asfant. So God manifested by his means many wonders among the sick and the lepers; and he healed those in whom were unclean spirits, and raised the dead in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And after some days a great miracle took place in his presence. There was a Copt at Asfant, who had two sons and one daughter, all of whom he kept in his house; and they were pure virgins, serving God. But Satan led the three astray by a vile deed, namely that he entered into the elder of the sons, and said to him : « Since thy father will not give thee a wife, go in to thy sister, and sleep with her, for she will be sufficient for thee for a time ». And he made this deed seem pleasant to him, so he committed it. Likewise he tempted the other younger brother to sin with her also. Thus the two brothers did with their sister that foul deed; but the one did not know of the other; and that perverse girl kept this secret, until she speedily became pregnant. And her parents kept her on account of the shame, and they did not know what had been done; so she remained many months without bearing a child. Then they set her upon a beast, and took her to the holy Matthew; and when they drew near to the mountain, the old man came forth, fleeing and tearing the hair of his beard, until he met them at the foot of the mountain. Thereupon the parents made known to him what had happened to her, and wished to give him gifts, that he might pray over her, that she might bring forth; so he bade them take her gently down from the back of the beast; and she alighted, being in great agony. Then he said to her : « Make known to me what thou hast done, thou vile woman! » So she made known to him what we have recorded, and more also. Thereupon he raised his hands to heaven, and prayed; and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed her up. And many were present, and witnessed this; and one who was present bore witness to us, being a truthful and trustworthy man, of the children of the Church, that that spot became like a dark well, descending into the depths of the earth, and remained so six months, while fire ascended from it into the air, and an evil smell came up from it, so that none could approach it. The place was at some little distance from the monastery, about twenty-five bowshots.

Likewise in the monastery of the holy Abba Sinuthius on the Mount of Adrîbâ, you know that many of the saints were confirmed there, and especially the blessed Archimandrite Abba Seth. For he was a man who walked in a good path during his life; and after his departure to the Lord, we beheld with our own eyes his tomb, which was built over him in gratitude for the many miracles and the healing and the cures, which take place through his holy body to this hour, and are innumerable from their multitude; for wonders are worked by it every day.

In the desert of Wadi Habîb also there were holy men who saw visions and revelations, to whom God disclosed that which took place in the world, so that they beheld it as if they were present everywhere. For to some of them the Lord Christ and the holy Apostles appeared, and raised them up in their poverty and devotion; and to some of them the angels appeared. And there was among them an old man in the monastery of Saint Macarius, named John, a native of Shubrâ Maisinâ, which is also called Arwâṭ. Him the Berbers seized three times, and took prisoner; and they made him a slave, and ill-treated him and caused him to suffer. But the Lord looked upon his patience continually, and restored him to his holy monastery. After this he became hegumen, for he was a priest; and this was a rule in the desert of Wadî Habîb, that every monk who attained the rank of priest was appointed hegumen. And he never communicated of the Holy Mysteries without seeing the Lord and Saviour in his vision, with our Lady the Virgin; and great secrets were made manifest to him. And there were holy men with him of this desert, whose history we need not relate. And he had a disciple, named Epimachus of Arwâṭ, who was counted worthy of the office of hegumen after him, and was like him in his heart in all his actions; and upon him was much grace, like Moses the prophet in his time; for he healed the sick, and cured every disease, and lived for more than a hundred years.

fore anyone questioned him upon it. He had two spiritual brothers, one of them being Abba George and the other Abba Abraham, and they were holy and famous for virtuous living and great deeds; and trustworthy men bore witness of them, that they walked in the way of the great Anthony, and brought it to perfection. Now the lay monks at that time worshipped God zealously; and these two holy men beheld the baptized people in the church like white sheep, both old and young. But lo, one of the community became slothful, and went back from the good service of God; and so these two old men beheld him with his colour changed to black in the midst of the brethren. And when the priests had dimissed the brethren, those two went to the cell of that brother, and said to him : « Turn from thy sloth ». And they exhorted him and comforted him. So on the morrow, when he came to the church, those two looked upon him, and he had become whiter than all the brethren; and therefore they praised God for his mercy to the race of men. In this way, if thou wilt that I record the deeds of the saints, they would be too many for the time, and too numerous for the pens, and too many for the sheets of paper. Glory be to God for ever and ever!

COSMAS I, THE FORTY-FOURTH PATRIARCH. A. D. 730-731.

When the Father Alexander went to his rest, they appointed instead of him a man named Cosmas, who was a holy monk of the desert of Saint Macarius, and a native of Banâ. So they seated him on the throne against his will; but he did not cease to pray night and day to the Lord Christ that he would receive him to himself. And at the end of fifteen months he went to his rest with glory and honour, on the last day of Ba'unah.

Now there was outside Maryûṭ a monastery called Ṭamnûrah, in which there was an old monk, holy and spiritual, and also a young monk; and they used to chastise their bodies with iron and with chains. For the superior, whose name was John, was endowed with grace and the power of prophecy, and saw wonders many times, and he had a disciple who served him and was named Theodore; and this man envied his deeds, and imitated his life and all his works with spiritual love, and surpassed all in the monastery in his conduct, in the diaconicon and at the table of the brethren and in all the affairs of the monastery and its service, seeking abasement at all times. For Theodore used to follow the words of Christ to his disciples[1]: « He among you who desires to be great, let him be to you a servant ». And he acted in this manner until he grew old, as he said to us with his own holy mouth when he was counted worthy of the patriarchal dignity; for he taught us and incited us to humility at all times. And in the lifetime of Alexander, his spiritual father said to him prophetically : « O my son Theodore, believe that I do not lie ». He answered : « Yea O my father, I have never heard the name of a lie from thy mouth ». The father said to him (another copy reads, The old man said to him) : « O believer in God, verily in the year in which Alexander dies, I in my meanness shall die with him, and thou shalt sit upon the throne of the glorious Father Saint Mark, not after the Father Alexander, but after him who shall follow him ». And the words of that orthodox old man, the Archimandrite, were fulfilled.

For the people of Alexandria, the priests and officials, were taking thought as to whom they should appoint in the room of Abba Cosmas, until the Lord recalled to their minds the memory of the holy father and monk Theodore. Therefore they journeyed to the monastery, and took him and brought him to Alexandria.

THEODORE, THE FORTY-FIFTH PATRIARCH. A. D. 731-743.

And an assembly of the holy bishops met together and consecrated the holy Father Theodore patriarch by the command of the Lord Christ. And the affairs of the patriarchate and of the orthodox church grew and prospered during all his days, until they returned to their former state, and became still more flourishing, so that it seemed as if the church had never been plundered. And Theodore was a good man, tranquil, full of charity towards all men, beautiful in countenance like an angel of God; and in his days nothing evil was done.

But Ubaid Allah, the ruler in Egypt, brought punishments and trials and losses upon the people of Egypt, and added an eighth of a dinar to every dinar of the taxes; and through his oppression of the people the dinar grew rare and rose in value. Yet when he continued long in this course, God would not suffer him, but raised up against him some of the chief among the Muslims, who went to Hishâm the prince, and made known to him the evil which he did, and the troubles that he had caused in Egypt. Therefore Hishâm was filled with wrath against Ubaid Allah, and wrote at once to remove him, and despatched an officer with many attendants to Egypt in great anger. And he commanded that he should be banished with his younger son, Isma'îl, to the land of the Berbers in the province of Africa, and that Isma'îl should be exiled thence to the land of the Setting Sun, and punished because he did not do what was commanded him. So this was speedily done to him. Hishâm made Ubaid Allah's elder son, Al-Kasim, governor in Egypt, and set him over her affairs instead of his father, who was banished to the Berbers. When he had remained there a short time he ruled over the Berbers in Africa, where his son Isma'îl was, until he was banished whither the prince commanded. For Ubaid Allah wrote to Hishâm, seeking to conciliate him, and expressing repentance of what he had done, and begging him to make him governor of that country; and so he was made governor over the Berbers in Africa. Yet his deeds were again evil, for he seized the daughters of rich men and the daughters of the chiefs and officers, and sent them to Hishâm the prince as maidservants, writing to him that they were slave-girls whom he had bought for him as maidservants. Likewise the sheep, when they were near parturition, he ripped them open, and took out the lambs just covered with wool, and took their skins and made pelisses of them, and sent them to Hishâm, saying that he had bought them for him; so that he destroyed large numbers of sheep from that country. Therefore the Berbers conspired against him, forming a plot to kill his son Isma'îl and the people of his house; and they seized Isma'îl and his wives and concubines and all that belonged to him, and killed them all in his presence, while he looked on. And they ripped the women open, and took the infants from them, and threw them down before him.

اسمعيل معه[1] الى بلاد البربر من اعمال افريقية وينفى منها الى مغرب الشمس ويعذّب لانه ما يفعل ما امره به ففعل به ذلك سرعة وجعل ولده الاكبر القاسم[2] بمصر واليًا وولاه امورها عوضًا من ابيه ونفى المذكور الى البربر ولما اقام هناك يسيرًا ملك على البربر بافريقية وكان ولده اسمعيل هناك الى ان ينفى الى حيث امر الملك وكتب الى هشام يستعطفه ويتوب اليه ممّا كان منه ويسئله ان يولّيه تلك البلاد فولى على البربر بافريقية وكانت افعاله ايضًا ردية فاخذ بنات الناس الملاح وبنات المقدّمين والامراء فانفذهنّ الى هشام الملك سراريّ ويكتب اليه انهنّ جوارٍ اشتراهنّ له سراريّ وكذلك النعاج اذا قربت ولادتها يشقّ بطونها ويخرج منها الخراف بعد ان يصوفون فيأخذ جلودهم يعمل منها فراء وينفذها الى هشام ويقول له انه ابتاعها له حتى افنى نعاجًا كثيرًا من تلك البلاد فتشاوروا عليه البربر ان يقتلوا ولده اسمعيل واهل بيته فاخذوه ونساءه واولاده وسراريّه وكلما ينطوى اليه وقتلوهم جميعهم قدّامه[3] وهو ينظرهم ويشقّون بطون النساء ونزعوا الاولاد

Then they brought Isma'il to Africa, taking him bound to his father, and killed him in his presence while he looked on, after ripping him open and striking his father on the head and face with his dead body; and afterwards they drove his father away from their country, following and insulting him, while he was sad and weeping. And our father Theodore lived to see all these things.

Then the Lord visited him, and he departed to him in a good old age and in the grace of the Lord Christ. And the Church was growing, without adversaries or internal divisions, all his days. He remained upon the apostolic throne eleven years and a half, and went to his rest on the seventh day of Amshir.

history, for he described what had happened on the earth from Adam the first man to his own time; and after him were the prophets who prophesied what should take place; and after them the holy apostles preached what they themselves had witnessed : so those who followed them did likewise. Then there were the teachings of the inspired fathers of the Church, and the words which confirmed the faith and the baptized brethren who put on the garment of light; and the divinely assisted fathers who gave strength to the firm foundation and to the immovable pillar [1]. And we have the Lord Jesus Christ, the Saviour, who delivered us and saved us from our sins by his Incarnation of the pure Virgin, and graciously granted to us the opening of our hearts and understandings by the hearing of his holy Scriptures. Philo and Justus and Josephus, the Jews, were the first who related the destruction of Jerusalem. Those who composed for us the history of the holy Church were Africanus and Eusebius and Sozomenus, who showed us the good and the evil, and the trials which befell the saints and shepherds of the flock of the Lord Christ, and the troubles which they underwent for the sake of the Church and the orthodox people at the hands of the secular governors at all times, not only in Egypt, but also at Antioch and Rome and Ephesus. There appeared the heresy of Nestorius, whose tongue deserved to be cut out at the root, and the false teaching of the other heretics at that time; but God dispersed them all, like the dust before the wind, that is to say, by means of the young lion, Cyril, who excommunicated Nestorius with the rest of the heretics, and whose writings were placed in all the orthodox churches of the world. This is shown to us by that book which begins with the names of the patriarchs as far as the true confessor and champion, Dioscorus, who anathematized Leo, the soul-devouring lion, as his name implies, and excommunicated the six hundred and thirty, assembled at Chalcedon, and Marcian the prince and the vile princess Pulcheria, and all the followers of Leo, and was deposed by command of the princes, and sent into exile, where he finished his fight. Dioscorus brought back many souls to the Lord Christ by his action. And all that happened was written down for us to that point in the twelfth part of the histories of the Church. And for the first history of events subsequent to that, from the time of the Father Cyril when he was in the monastery of Ablah, down to the days of the father and confessor Alexander, we may consult the teacher and scribe in his time, who was the archdeacon and companion and secretary of the Father Patriarch Abba Simon, patriarch of Alexandria, namely the monk, Abba George. For he wrote that history on the mountain of the holy Macarius in the Wadî Habîb, and informed us of what happened in the time of Marcian, the unbelieving prince, and the trouble that overtook our fathers and those that came after them, down to the time of Sulaiman, son of Abd al-Melik, prince of the Muslims, after whom reigned Omar, son of Abd al-Azîz, who drove away Usâmah, the unbelieving governor, who had been before his reign in Egypt. Therefore I, the vile sinner, beg you to pray the Lord Christ for me, that through your prayers he may loose the bond of my feeble tongue, and open my darkened heart, and give me knowledge of words, so that perchance I may be able to show to you, my brethren and my father, what you ask of me, although it exceed my power, not as a teacher and guide greater than you, but as a scholar, since I saw that of which I have written with my own eyes, and its importance imposes a debt upon me, and my hand touched it, besides what I heard from friends older than myself, such as I could trust and believe. God forbid that I should act according to the words of the true gospel[1], concerning the servant who buried his Lord's silver in the ground. I declare to your Holiness, vile sinner among men as I am, that I follow the words of David, when he praises the Creator in the 112th Psalm : « Who raises the poor from the earth and the needy from the dunghill, and sets him with the rich of the people[2] ». He it is who has seated me among the holy fathers, so that I witnessed what befell them in my heart, that I might write it down, although unworthy; for they became shepherds upon the earth, and in many cases gave up their lives for the name of Christ. Let me then record a few of their deeds, for the rest of them the Lord Christ alone knows, with all that took place in former times. But indeed the Lord Christ knows that we have added nothing to the facts, having related what took place down to the death of the blessed Father Theodore, patriarch of Alexandria, and the affairs of state in his days, to the end of the seventeenth chapter of the History, completed above. Now, by the will of God and your holy prayers, we will write the eighteenth chapter of the History of the Church.

When Ubaid Allah left Egypt, Al-Kasim, his son, became governor after him, and was much more wicked than his father, according to the words of the holy gospel; « Every evil tree brings forth evil fruit[1] ». This man did evil before God and men in his time of government, and walked in the bad path, as I will relate further on. Solomon, the wise son of David, says : « Woe to the people of a kingdom which is ruled by a child[2]! » Now this Al-Kasim was a child in age and conduct; and when an ignorant prince rules, all his companions will be like him. The first beginning of his acting thus was that he loved evil and loved women, like horses which neigh one after another. He obtained for himself female slaves of every race without number, and his heart was exceedingly pleased with them, as we witnessed with our own eyes many times. For he used to send for the blessed patriarch Theodore, acting like a wolf in sheep's clothing; and the Father Patriarch was accompanied by my spiritual father, the bishop Abba Moses, who went to bear him company; and the governor loved my father more than all the bishops. Then the governor brought his young female slaves to the patriarch that he might bless them; and I myself saw them; and he said to the Father Patriarch : « These are thy children; lay thy hand upon them and bless them, and give them a benediction, for I bought them recently ». This he did on several occasions with the Father Patriarch. Once when we visited him according to custom, the bishop Abba Abraham, bishop of the Faiyum or Arsinoites, was there on account of important business. And when we also appeared, Al-Kasim called one of his female slaves, who was a native of the West, and said to our father Abraham : « This is thy daughter ». And he placed the bishop's hand upon her hand, for his heart was as the heart of babes. And he said to the bishop : « Thou knowest that I have loved thee greatly since my father's time, and all that thou didst ask of my father, I will do for thee ». Then the holy Abraham said to him : « It is good ». So Al-Kasim continued : « I desire of thee three hundred dinars ». Thereupon the father gave directions to the archdeacon Simeon, who was his steward and had come with him, and who was counted worthy of the bishopric in succession to Abba Abraham. And the bishop said to the archdeacon : « Bring the three hundred dinars ». And he forthwith brought the money, and the bishop handed it over to Al-Kasim. For he had much property belonging to the churches, since he possessed in his diocese thirty-five monasteries in the Faiyum, of which he was the administrator; and he was bound to pay a tax of five hundred dinars, which were due to the Public Treasury upon this property. He had authority over all these monasteries, and the merchants of Egypt sold to him and bought of him. Then after the bishop had paid the three hundred dinars, Al-Kasim said to him : « I do thee this great honour that I have even made my wife a daughter to thee, and yet thou wilt not give her anything to honour her therewith ». Accordingly the bishop gave her a hundred dinars into her hand, and Al-Kasim reckoned them as part of the taxes due from him.

And Al-Kasim walked in the path of ignorance continually, and the oppression of the people was doubled in his days. He appointed subordinate governors throughout Egypt worse than himself, men who amassed money from strangers from Aswân to Alexandria; and he caused great trouble to the people throughout the land and in all the provinces, both great and small. The great man devoured the small man, and the strong devoured the weak, like the fishes of the sea; and those who collected the strangers' money devoured the poor and seized their property, until everyone was in distress.

After that, Al-Kasim made boats like the castles of kings, and when he had furnished them, he embarked in them his wives and his slaves, and sailed through the land of Egypt, and took them with him to Alexandria and Tinnis and Damietta, in order to take the money of the merchants and of the people and of the officials in those places. And he went up the river to Upper Egypt as far as Aswân, doing the same thing. And a body of troops and armed men travelled in his company; and they entered the theatre at Ansinâ.

And on a certain day Al-Kasim arrived at the Monastery of Saint Sinuthius, and went up with great pomp, taking with him one female slave whom he loved more than all the rest, besides his mamelukes; and he made her ride a mare, while he rode another mare at her side. He was accompanied also by an old man, who was a chief among the Muslims, named Rayân, son of Abd al-Azîz, the former governor of Egypt. So, when they reached the door, the aged superior of the monastery came out to meet them with all his sons, that they might do honour to the governor on account of his office. After Al-Kasim had passed through the second door, which is in the fortified wall which surrounds the church, while he remained on horseback, then he came to the door of the church, and began to prepare to enter it, still mounted. But the aged superior of the monastery cried aloud and said : « Dismount, O governor! Enter not into the house of God in such pride, and above all in the company of this woman who is with thee; for no woman has ever entered this church, and come out of it alive. Nay she will die on the spot ». Yet Al-Kasim gave no heed to his words, but entered, accompanied by his soldiers. Now the church was very large, and capacious enough to contain thousands of people. So when he reached the middle of the church, still riding, the mare on which the female slave was mounted plunged, and fell to the ground by the power of God; and the female slave died on the spot, both she and the horse that was under her. And as for Al-Kasim, there came upon him an unclean Satanic spirit which threw him down and choked him and buffeted him, so that he foamed at the mouth and gnashed with his teeth like a wild boar. But when he recovered a little, he saw that the old man, the superior of the monastery, was grieved for him; and he gave to the church four hundred dinars as a votive offering, as well as the horse which he was riding. And there was in the monastery a chest of teak-wood, inlaid with ivory, fitted with shelves, above which was the body of Saint Sinuthius. This chest had been made for the sake of the votive offerings, for the convenience of those who should put their votive offerings in it; and the books also were placed therein; and it was of handsome workmanship, admirable and beautiful. So Rayân, who was travelling together with Al-Kasim, admired it, and wished to take it away with him. Now Saint Sinuthius had spent much money on it. So they said to that man : « Thou canst not take it, for he who placed it here forbad its removal. » But he answered : « I must take it, either for a price or as a gift. » Then he bade ten men lift it up, but they could not. Then he called thirty men, but they could not move it. So when he saw the miracle, he gave the monks three hundred dinars. Then they all went away in fear and trembling and wonder. And the unclean spirit did not depart from Al-Kasim until the day of his death, but continued to torment him.

Then God sent down a great dearth upon the land of Egypt, on account of the sins of Al-Kasim. In the first year the land was dried up, and so provisions were scarce, and there was no wheat to be found; and many men and cattle died. Afterwards, in the second year, there came a pestilence upon Egypt, such as had not been before. But in spite of all this the wickedness of Al-Kasim did not diminish but increased, and he doubled the taxes laid upon the people. And when a person went to sleep at night he dreaded the light of morning, and yet he could not wish for night that he might rest from his many troubles. After the second year of famine came the third year, in which there was a drought, and the Nile did not rise at all; and the people saw no prosperity in the days of that governor, but the years passed in turn in this manner by God's command, a year of plague followed by a year of drought, until the end of the year in which the government was taken from him, namely the seventh year. And the plague lasted from the beginning of Hatûr each year until the twenty-second of Baunah, and raged chiefly at Misr on account of the multitude of sins committed there. And from the eighth of Bashans to the first of Baunah the mortality among the people was so great that not even a part of those who died could be counted; for on one day two thousand perished, and another day twelve hundred, and another day two thousand four hundred at Misr and Al-Gizah, among the people who inhabited those places and traders sojourning there; so that the burial of the dead was interrupted, and there were no tombs to hold them. And no male might be buried until the authorities knew of his death; and then his name was written down, and the name of his father, even in the case of young infants. Then our holy fathers prayed to the Lord, and the rich and the poor did likewise, and they besought him with fasting and prayer and weeping and supplication, until the Lord had pity on them, and took away the plague.

After this the merchants sold wheat to the people, and there was an abundant supply of it. So some of the corn-merchants went to a deacon, who practised magic and lived at Memphis, which is the ancient Miṣr; and they gave him much money, and begged him to enable them by his magic arts to sell their wheat at a high price. So he began to exercise his art in such a manner that God was angered, and to practise his vile sorcery. For there was with him an orphan boy, the son of a widow who had no other children. And he said to the widow : « Thou hast nothing to eat or to feed thy son withal. Give him to me that I may make him my son, and teach him my art ». So she delivered her son to the magician with joy. Now that unbeliever had visited many magicians in divers places, until they taught him to practise profound witchcraft; and thus he was able to do that by which the wheat became dear. Then indeed that miscreant took the widow's son, and led him into a chamber, and shut the door upon him, and hung him up by his hands and feet above the ground, and did to him what made God angry; for he did not cease gradually to flay the skin of the youth from his face to the back of his head daily, until he came to his shoulders. Then wheat became rare and scarce, and whereas it had been sold at the rate of fourteen ardebbs for a dinar, and then at two mudds for a dinar, at last it was not to be procured at all. At that time the monitor of the boys in the school went to the widow woman, and said to her :

« Thy son has not attended our school for many days. Where then is he? » So she went to that miscreant and enquired after her son, but could not find him. For he said to her : « I have not seen him for many days. He left my house, and returned to thine, and I know nothing about him ». Therefore when she heard this from him, she departed in great grief. But the boy was not dead even then, but was still fastened up and partly flayed. And the young monitor saw the magician, his master, entering hour after hour into the closet in which the boy was fastened. So he said in his heart : « What does my master do in these days, entering this closet and coming out? » And he was a sagacious youth. So when the master entered, he followed him secretly. Then he heard that boy, the widow's son, weeping and sighing and imploring his master; but he took no pity on him. And he uttered words in the sadness of his heart such as these : « Alas for thee, my mother, widowed and mourning as thou art, for thou knowest not what has become of me! Alas for thy womb which bore me, and thy breasts which gave me suck! Where dost thou behold the torments of thy orphan son? Would that I had died when thou didst bear me in thy womb, and would that thou hadst never brought me forth upon earth, so that I should fall into this grievous torment! Where are thine eyes beholding me, longing to see me and gaze upon me, who am in this torment? » And the boy said many things like these, in the hearing of the young monitor. So the monitor went away quickly in great terror, stumbling and raising himself again in the extremity of his fear, until he reached the house of the widowed mother of the boy. So he said to her : « I have found thy son. » Then she came speedily, after he had repeated to her what he had heard from her son's mouth, and went to the governor, and repeated to him what had happened and what she had heard. So the governor despatched with her some trustworthy Muslims, and some officials with them, to the house of that miscreant, and they found him within the closet, in which the boy still was, fastened up and flayed from his neck to his shoulders. So they carried the lad away, and led the magician bound before the governor. For at once they fastened his hands and feet, and his ears were cut off in the presence of the governor, and then he confessed all that had been done by him. And they brought in the boy, and beheld him in that state. And they wrote at once to Al-Kasim governor of Egypt; and when he had read the letter, he gave orders that the magician should be stoned and burnt in the fire.

But, in spite of all these things, Al-Kasim did not desist from his evil ways and his love for the amassing of gold. And he used constantly to change the subordinate governors, who acted as his deputies. Now there was a tribe in the mountains in the eastern part of Egypt, from Bilbais to Al-Kulzum and the sea, consisting of Muslims who were called Arabs. And there were among them more than thirty thousand horsemen, roving through those deserts and districts, and they had chiefs in command over them.

Al-Kasim, therefore, appointed as their governor a steward of the palace, named Abu Jarah; and his tents were near a monastery named after Our Lady Mary, near Tinnîs. In this monastery there were many monks and priests, adorned with good works, and a holy hegumen named Epimachus, who had come from Wadî Habîb, from the Monastery of Saint Macarius, and who was afterwards counted worthy to be made a bishop. And there were with him, among the monks in this monastery, Abba Mennas, who became bishop of the city of Memphis, and Abba James the priest, and many others. And the steward of the palace had two brothers, whom he took up to the monastery; and he entered the church with them, and drove out the monks; and they plundered the church, and seized everything in the monastery, whether stuffs or provisions or furniture. And the steward's younger brother was worse than he. For there was in the cell of the hegumen a cross erected at the east end, with which he drove away the devils who frequently appeared to him. So that youth entered the cell and said to the hegumen : « What is the purpose of this cross? » Whereupon he answered : « It is the cross of Christ, my God. » He said to him : « Dost thou adore him? » The monk answered : « Yea ». So the young man spat upon the cross, and treated it insultingly, and reviled the aged hegumen. And the old man went forth from the monastery in great sorrow, saying : « If God do not requite this youth for his deed, I will never return to this church all the days of my life. » Then he departed to another place, and remained there; and he said within himself : « I will wait ten days, and see what will take place; and if nothing occur, I will depart. » So, on the eighth day, that young man went and sat in the privy place, and his bowels gushed out, as it had happened to Arius the unbeliever. Therefore when his brother, the steward of the palace, beheld that punishment, he was afraid, and departed from the monastery; and fear came to all who heard or saw.

Afterwards the steward went round through that district until he found the holy Epimachus, whom he brought back to the church, after entreating him with respect and honour; and he restored to him all that had been taken away. And great fear fell upon the Muslims and long remained among them.

During all this time, the church of Alexandria remained widowed, without a patriarch. Therefore the orthodox Theodosians assembled, and called the bishops together. And a number of the heretical Chalcedonians met together; and they formed a council at Miṣr. And three men were brought forward, that one of them might be chosen, and enthroned as patriarch. But it did not please the Lord that one of them should receive that degree, but he kept it for him whom he had selected and marked out from the womb, as shall appear further on in our discourse.

And God took away the government from Al-Kasim; for the caliph sent to him one who arrested him and carried him away to his master under guard and restraint. And when he reached Bilbais, together with those in charge of him, who were conducting him to the caliph, the bishops and a body of Christians came to him at Bilbais, and begged him to allow them to appoint a patriarch. Then he demanded of them that they should give him money; but they would not give it, and so he refused permission, and would not allow them to appoint a patriarch. Then Abba Theodore, bishop of Miṣr, who was the oldest of the bishops at that time, and was the first of three bishops named Theodore who successively occupied the see of Miṣr, said to my spiritual father, Abba Moses, bishop of Wasîm : « Behold, Father, the conduct of this Al-Kasim, and the evil that he has done among men, such as thou hast never seen before this day, but which I have beheld during the greater part of my time! » The bishop Abba Moses replied : « Pardon me, my Lord and Father. If this man return to Egypt, then God has not spoken by me the sinner. But thou shalt hear what God will do to this wicked wretch ».

After this the commissioners conducted Al-Kasim on his journey. And he never returned to Egypt, but all his goods were seized, while he was tortured and imprisoned. And the caliph sent to Egypt, and seized his male and female slaves, who were carried away to the caliph.

Then the bishops returned with their attendants to Miṣr, where they found that the Chalcedonians had anticipated then, having chosen a follower of their sect, a man who made needles in the market-place, named Cosmas. For they had collected among themselves gold and silver and plate, and had given them to that perverse governor, Al-Kasim, before he departed; and he had given orders that they should appoint him patriarch. So the Chalcedonians took that man Cosmas, and ordained him patriarch for themselves, and triumphed over the orthodox, because they had elected a patriarch, whereas the latter had not nominated one for themselves.

The governor of Egypt who succeeded Al-Kasim was a man named Ḥafs, son of Al-Walîd, a native of Ḥadramaut, of high rank among the Muslims in Egypt, and a Sunnite according to their religion. In those days a council of bishops assembled at Miṣr, in the year 459 of Diocletian, on the 28th day of Misri. And there were with them the clergy of Alexandria and the chief laymen, who brought men with them, so that the election might fall upon some one. And one of the bishops mentioned a certain name secretly; but God, who knows all, had reserved this degree for him who was worthy of it. These are the names of the bishops assembled to appoint the patriarch :

for what reason are we assembled? » He answered : « My Father, the Lord Christ will settle all matters, and so will Saint Mark, and all of us also, for the chief Shepherd of our souls and bodies is with us. » Then all the people and the assembly cried with a loud voice together saying : « The Lord Christ will accomplish this matter according to his will. » Thereupon they stood up and prayed; and when they had finished the prayers, they agreed to meet on the morrow; and each one of them departed to his own place. Now some of the bishops, from the North, had mentioned the name of one whom they had selected; and Abba Abraham, bishop of the Faiyum, heard of it. So Abba Peter, bishop of Tarnûṭ, who had lived all his days in the desert of Father Macarius, and was beautiful in his conduct and excellent in his actions, said to them : « I warn thee not to lay thy hand on him whom they shall bring forward to thee, until the opinion of the assembly shall be unanimous concerning him; for he is not fit for this degree. » Now Abba Peter had grown weak through his great age, and was kept apart from the rest.

And on the second day they assembled and prayed and took their seats. The clergy of Alexandria being present, the archpriest exclaimed : « Bring this matter to a settlement, my Lords and Fathers. » So Theodore said to them : « Who is it that you have chosen, that we also may know him? » Thereupon the archpriest said : « Such and such an one, and here is his name written down. » Then Theodore said to them : « If the assembly approve of him, he is fit. » The archpriest replied : « This affair regards us, not the bishops, who have nothing to do except to lay their hands upon him, and no more; for it is we who elect the patriarch. » Then Abba Abraham, bishop of the Faiyum, said to them : « Your bishops also may propose to you him whom they choose. Yet if you have proposed one who is worthy, we will ordain him; but if he is not worthy, we shall reject him. » Thus a discussion took place between the two parties on the second day; and after prayer they dispersed. And they continued to act in this way till ten days were over. During this time there was peace between them, and there were many discussions by day and by night; yet they would not give up their views, nor would the bishops of Upper Egypt adopt their opinion in this matter, but remained separated from them, saying : « If this man were the only man possible, we would not appoint him. » But some of the bishops of the northern dioceses were in agreement with the clergy of the Alexandrians with regard to his appointment. Then on the 4th day of the new month, namely Tut, Satan began to sow dissension among them, so that sadness and weeping came to them on account of it. For the bishops who were in agreement with the Alexandrians cried and said : « If we do not elect this man whose name we have written, we will not elect anyone. » But the Lord Christ, who cared for all these matters, was displeased at their words; while the man whom he approved for this ministry was kept in reserve. Thus there was a quarrel between them that day, as there had been over the matter of the Barsanuphians. And while they were in this plight, God put it into their hearts at that hour to send for the two bishops, Abba Moses of Wasîm and Peter of Tarnûṭ; for they said : « If you do not bring the two aforesaid, there will never be peace between us. » Now Abba Moses was very weak, because he had been confined by sickness for six months in the Monastery of Nahyâ, and Abba Peter likewise at the church of Our Lady on the Holy Mountain of Wasîm, in the Monastery of Nahyâ, which stands on the bank of Al-Gizah to the west of Miṣr. So the bishop of Miṣr and the bishop of the Faiyum went to those two, and informed them of what had occurred. But Abba Moses could not mount a beast or sit upon it on account of the great pain which he was suffering; so the fathers contrived a plan, and had him carried on the bier on which the dead were borne, for they found nothing else there. And some of the faithful bore him on their shoulders, till they brought him to Al-Fusṭâṭ. But they made Abba Peter ride on a horse; and there was a great company with him. When they arrived, the assembly |met together on the 8th day, and the clergy of Miṣr and the officials with them, that they might settle this business by the will and help of God. And there were with them the archdeacon of the church of Saint Sergius, and the aged officials Mennas and Paul, and many of the Christians of Misr. So they prayed and took their seats, and began to attack one another with words, as at the beginning. As the strife increased, the bishops of the North said : « Wilt thou not appoint this man whose name is written down? » But Abba Abraham, bishop of the Faiyum, said : « We have no part or lot with him. » Then Abba Abraham said : « If you would listen to me, we would all of us beseech God, as the canons command, and pray him to raise up for us whom he will, that so the Church may not be divided into two parties ». Then some of the Northern bishops signified their approval of this proposal, and took their seats with the bishops of Upper Egypt. Now the blessed Abba Moses, bishop of Wasim, was lying in the midst of the assembly, on account of the severity of the pain which he suffered, and when he heard them speak of schism, he rose up by the power of the Holy Ghost which was with him, and beckoned with his hand to the clergy of Alexandria, so that they drew near to him. Then he said to them : « What are you saying? » They answered : « What Abba Mennas, bishop of Tmai, says, that is our opinion; for it is we that appoint the patriarch, and you have nothing to do with this matter. » Now there was by his side a staff for him to lean upon on account of his infirmity, so he called to mind what the Lord did in the Temple, when he drove out the money-changers therein with the scourge of cords; and he rose up and drove out the clergy of Alexandria, and pursued them, striking them with the staff, till he had forced them out through the door, saying to them : « Depart from the midst of us! Ruin not the church of God through the desires of your hearts! » Then he turned to the bishop Abba Mennas, and the bishops with him, and said : « What have I to do with this man who is not chosen by the Lord Christ, but whom thou desirest and delightest in? If thou knowest any of his virtues, recount them in the midst of the assembly. Then, if they approve of him, it is a thing from God, and he may be appointed. » When Abba Mennas heard this, he said to Abba Moses : « The books forbid this, therefore leave him; but if you know the virtues of any man, then appoint him. » Then he made a prostration, and departed, saying : « Let there be unity and concord among you; I am innocent of this mischief. » Then they separated on that day, after the prayer of the Sixth Hour, in sorrow and great grief, because they had not found anyone to appoint. For the names of many were mentioned, but they would not agree to any one of them.

But at midnight a deacon in the company of Abba Moses awoke and said to him : « Pardon me, my Father, I know one worthy of this office. » He said to him : « Who is he my son? » The deacon answered : « He is the holy and precious one, the priest Michael at the church of Saint Macarius, a pure virgin, brought up in the desert ». Then the bishop Abba Peter cried and said : « He who speaks by this deacon is Christ. O my son, verily this priest Michael is worthy of this rank ». So on the morrow they assembled, and there was a discussion among them, according to their custom; and then they mentioned the priest Michael, the aforesaid. So all the people cried out, old and young with one voice, saying : « In truth that man is worthy ». And before this he had seen a holy man, who received revelations from the Lord, for he bore witness to him of that and said : « I heard a voice from heaven, while I was in the church of the holy Saint Macarius, saying : The priest Michael is worthy to be patriarch ».

Then they all rose up and proceeded to the palace, and made known to Hafs what had taken place, and what they had agreed upon, and prayed him to write a letter to the seniors and priests of Wadî Habîb, that they might give up the said Abba Michael to the bishops and clergy. So the governor wrote letters for them, and they took them and went out of his presence. Now the Lord Jesus Christ had already moved the superiors of Wadî Habîb for a certain cause; and they had come forth from the desert with the aforesaid priest Michael in their company; and the reason was that they had met together and taken counsel, saying : « Al-Kasim, the tyrant, increased our land-tax and poll-tax beyond our power to pay. Now a new governor is come, therefore let us go and visit him and pray for him, and congratulate him on his appointment; and let us have confidence in God, and beg the governor to remove these unjust exactions from us ». So they arrived at the Island on the 13th of Tut. And on that day the messengers of the council had started with the letters on their way to the desert; and when they had crossed the river, they met the superiors of the monks, and with them Abba Michael, on whose account they had undertaken their journey. Therefore, when they saw him, they were greatly astonished, and wondered and rejoiced exceedingly; and each one of them marvelled at what the Lord Christ had done. So they took him, and conducted him to the governor's palace, with all the clergy of Miṣr acclaiming him and chanting before him, till they reached the palace. And they said : « The Lord has sent us the trusted shepherd, the new Mark ». Then when they informed Ḥafs of what had happened, he marvelled greatly; and he clapped his hands together and said : « Let us bless the God of the Christians, who has done deeds at which we wonder ». And he said to them : « This man is he whom God has chosen for you, to be a father for you. Take him, and depart with him in peace ». And Abba Theodore, the bishop of the diocese, went forward and approached the governor and prayed for him, and then departed with the patriarch. And the people cut off pieces of Michael's garments for the sake of a blessing.

in the boats, and went down the river to Alexandria, which they reached on the night of the 16th of Tut; and many people came forth to meet the patriarch. But as they entered the streets of the city, carrying candles and crosses and books of the gospels before him, rain began to descend upon them; and it lasted three days and three nights, pouring in torrents. And all the tribes in Alexandria said : « This man is from God. Two years have passed without a fall of rain in this city. Blessed is the entrance of this man into our city! » And they consecrated him on the 17th day of Tut.

Now we would fain relate a few of his deeds in the monastic life, and his miracles before he became patriarch; but we fear to be tedious, for everything has a measure, as the Scriptures say. Moreover I have related these matters in the book of his biography, apart from this history.

At that time the blessed Athanasius at Antioch departed to the Lord. And Hishâm, the prince, appointed after him a trustworthy man, named John. Then Hishâm died, and the government of the empire was undertaken by a man named Al-Walîd, son of Yazîd, son of Abd al-Malik. Since, however, his people hated him, he began to build a city named after himself in the desert, for he gave his name to it; but the water was fifteen miles distant from it. He collected workmen from all quarters, and built that city by means of forced labour; and on account of the multitude many died every day from the scarcity of water; for though the water was carried thither by twelve hundred camels daily, yet this was not enough for them; the camels being divided into two bands, six hundred carrying water one day, and six hundred the next. Then Al-Walîd was attacked by a man named Ibrahim, who killed him, and seized the government instead of him. Ibrahim released the enslaved workmen, who departed each one to his own place; and he appointed a new governor in Egypt, named Ḥassân, son of Atâhiya; and this Ibrahim was a cousin of his. (But according to another copy the governor's name was Isa, son of Abu Aṭâ.) The new governor had been secretary to Usâmah, and he was acquainted with all that Usâmah had done. Now Egypt, before Ḥassân was governor, abounded in gold; and a dinar was as common as a dirhem among the people at that time. But when he arrived, a great pestilence broke out in the land, until a young calf was sold for twenty dinars. When Ḥassân's commissioners and friends informed him of this, he observed : « I know what the people of Egypt do. If I live, I will make them buy a bull for two dinars ». And at this time the Egyptians suffered great losses, and trials and troubles were brought upon them, so that the people offered their cattle and their children for sale.

And there was at Miṣr a young man, a Muslim, named Rajâ, who assembled a body of followers, and seized the government, with the assistance of Ḥafs the former governor. And they went to Ḥassân, and wished to kill him; but he fled from them to Damascus. And Ḥafs commanded that everyone in the provinces of Egypt should pray according to the laws of the Sunnite ritual, and proclaimed that all those, who would give up their own religion and become Muslims, should be exempted from the poll-tax; for that was an impost due from all of them. By means of this procedure Satan did much harm to many people who gave up their religion; and some of them enrolled themselves among the soldiery. And the patriarch, Abba Michael, saw these things with sadness and tears, because he beheld men denying the Lord Christ. And for these causes the bishops left their sees, and departed into the desert, and entered the monasteries, where they humbled themselves before the Lord in prayer.

At that time the Father Moses, bishop of Wasîm, was detained by his spiritual children in his see, and they would not let him depart from it to any other place; but he prayed for his flock that the wolf might not carry them away from his Church. And he remained at Al-Gizah and in the neighbourhood of Miṣr, constantly superintending the affairs of his children. And behold, some of the orthodox officials of Miṣr came to his house in sadness, and said to him : « Father, pray for us earnestly. sions of this governor, and they amount to twenty-four thousand persons ». So the father said to them : « My children, be assured that this month you will see with your own eyes this unbelieving governor Ḥafs burnt with fire in the midst of Fusṭâṭ Miṣr; and Raja will be slain with the sword ». And the father's prophecy was speedily fulfilled. Morever this holy man used to heal the sick in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and gave to men the gift of repentance.

Then the prince sent a general to Egypt, accompanied by five thousand fighting men, that they might make war upon Ḥafs. The name of this general was Ḥautharah; and he gained possession of Egypt, and caused Ḥafs to be burnt in the fire, and killed Rajâ with the sword, and seized all their goods, as the blessed one had prophesied. So the prince took away the government from those two, because they had driven Ḥassân away from the country, and had taken the power into their own hands without his orders. And Ḥautharah sent their property to the prince. And the government was restored to Ḥassân for these reasons; and he was a wise judge like Solomon, and loved the churches and the bishops and monks; and he loved the patriarch Abba Michael, and used to admit him, and converse with him often, when he visited him, from the first days of his patriarchate. And as for Ḥautharah, after what had happened, he remained in Egypt with his troops. And he loved the orthodox; and, as he resided at Wasîm with all his army for three years, he used to consult the Father

Abba Moses about the salvation of his soul. But there was much disturbance in the outer provinces, and fighting among the Muslims, and they killed one man after another, so that even their governors did not remain in office for a whole year but were slain before it was over. At last there arose a man named Marwân, prince of those Turks; and he brought his army, and seized the empire by force, and ruled it with a strong arm like Pharao; and none could withstand him, but he destroyed them with the sword; and every year he shed much blood of those who fought against him. And there was in Marwân's house a Chalcedonian deacon, named Theophylact, who was a goldsmith and wrought in gold for the prince's household; and he prayed them to gain promotion for him from the prince, by making him patriarch over his fellow-countrymen, the Greeks; for they had no patriarch at that time. So this was done for him speedily; and they appointed him patriarch over the Chalcedonians.

Now peace and prosperity continued in Egypt for five years. Then the governor was removed from Egypt, and a man named Abd al-Malik was appointed. He was a son of Musa, son of Naṣîr, of the family of Ḥassân the Jew, who had overrun part of the West. And this governor hated the Christians greatly, and was exceedingly proud, and caused much trouble to the people of Egypt, and gave rise to much disturbance in the country, seizing for the benefit of Marwân the gold and silver and copper and iron, and everything that he could find. This he did by the advice of an evil man, who had learnt these deeds from Satan, and was director of all the arsenals of Egypt, and of the affairs of the government, and was named Abd ar-Raḥîm. His labours at last produced results unheard of before, namely that he took linen rags and smeared the ships of the fleet with decoctions of herbs which he mixed up together; so that, when the fire was thrown by the Romans upon the ships, they did not burn. And this I saw with my own eyes; for the ships caught fire, but yet did not burn; and the fire was at once extinguished.

And merchants came from the country, bringing their wares, and collected money among themselves, and gave it to Marwân, and prayed him to allow them to rebuild the churches of Miṣr; and so he consented to their request. But the friends of Theophylact the Chalcedonian, who was also called Cosmas, said to him : « Verily there are many churches of ours in Egypt, of which the Theodosians, that is to say the Copts, took possession, when the government of the Romans was overthrown; and now we have no church there. We beg the prince to write for us to Egypt, and send by us letters commanding that the church of Saint Mennas at Maryût be handed over to us, so that we may communicate there. » For that church was famous for many miracles, and had been endowed with property in many places. So Theophylact took to Abd al-Malik, son of Musa, son of Naṣîr, letters which directed him to settle the dispute between the Jacobites and the Chalcedonians, and ordered that the truth concerning the founders of that church should be ascertained, and that it should be handed over to them. And when Abd al-Malik had read the letters from Marwân, he despatched an officer to Alexandria, and commanded that the two patriarchs, the Jacobite and the Chalcedonian, should be brought before him. Now the fast was at hand, so he commanded that they should be summoned.

And when Abba Michael reached Wasîm, the bishop, Abba Moses, went out to meet him, and travelled with him until they came to Abd al-Malik. And there was with us the bishop Abba Theodore, bishop of Miṣr, who, before he became bishop, had been archdeacon of the church of Saint Macarius in Wadî Habîb. And we attended at the palace together with the Chalcedonians every day, and this we continued to do during the forty days of the fast, from early morning to the end of the day. And the bishop of the Romans, and their patriarch Cosmas went with us. Now the said bishop hated the people of his religion; for he said : « I have not gone so far as to add a fourth Person to the Trinity. » His name was Constantine, and with him was a deacon, named Anastasius, of the church of the Melkites at Alexandria. And Abd al-Malik assembled the Melkites, and read the decree to them, and enquired into the truth of the allegations. And the dispute carried on before him had great results; for the orthodox with their arguments from the Holy Scriptures prevailed over the Chalcedonians, so that Abd al-Malik marvelled. Then he summoned the chief of his Divan, who was a Muslim with two Divans under his authority, and another man called Isa, son of Amir, and handed them over to him, that he might thoroughly investigate the matter, and make it known; and he ordered that each party should expound its claims in a letter. But the Chalcedonians went secretly to the house of Isa, and offered him bribes, that he might favour them in their claims. And the patriarch, Abba Michael, assembled his bishops, and wrote a letter full of all wisdom and of the grace of God, and of the words of the holy Scriptures of God, giving an account of the foundation of the church of the martyr, Saint Mennas, and of the troubles and banishments endured by our fathers, the patriarchs, at the hands of the Chalcedonians, and of the taking of the churches from them by the hands of the princes of the Romans; and that report was written down in Coptic and in Arabic. Afterwards they assembled together, and gave that report to the aforesaid Isa, who read it and marvelled at the patriarch's eloquence. Then the Chalcedonians sent him a letter a span long, with two words in it; and, when he had read it, he laughed and shook his head; and the two letters were read in public, and all present heard their contents. Then our father the patriarch, Abba Michael, said to Isa : « My Lord Secretary, it is not right that we should allow our enemies, who have no God, to hear our words, so that they may take them as a proof hereafter. » Isa replied : « I will read the letter. » But he only did this in guile, and in his care for the interests of the Chalcedonians, because of the bribe which he had received from them.

Now behold, we will cite a part of the contents of the letter written by the blessed Father Patriarch : « Michael, by the grace of God bishop of the city of Alexandria and of the Theodosian people, to the governors, with regard to the church of the glorious Saint Mennas at Maryûṭ. At that time reigned the faithful and pious princes, Arcadius and Honorius, in the days of the holy father, the patriarch Theophilus. He began to build the church of John the Baptist, and when he had finished it, he built the church of Saint Mennas at Maryûṭ, and another church named after Theodosius, son of Arcadius the prince, who helped him to build the churches. When Theophilus was dead, all his successors added to that church, little by little, until the days of the patriarch Timothy; so that it was he who completed it. After that time there came a diabolical prince, named Marcian; for it was he who divided the church through his corrupt creed, and banished the glorious father, the patriarch Dioscorus, who fought for the right faith of his fathers. And Marcian invented a vile new creed, being assisted therein by Leo, patriarch of Rome, who was anathematised by the patriarch Dioscorus together with his impure writings, which were full of heresy. And the aforesaid prince did wicked deeds against the children of the orthodox church, and was exceedingly tyrannical; for he slew some, and drove others away into exile; and they suffered severely at his hands. Nor did they cease to be oppressed in like manner, until the government was transferred to our lords the Muslims. And to this day we continue to dispute with the followers of that new creed. »

This is a little out of much contained in the letter of the glorious father, Abba Michael the patriarch. But as for the Chalcedonians, they wrote and said : « In the beginning the power was in our hands, and the churches with all their property were ours. But the Muslims, after their conquest of Egypt, handed them over to the Copts ».

Isa however, for the sake of the bribe which he had received from the Chalcedonians, was desirous of proving them in the right, and of convicting the Copts of falsehood. So he said : « Neither you nor they have brought any proof of your words. Go therefore and write two other letters besides these two, and bring them to us. » So we did as he said. Then he said again : « These are no arguments. Go therefore and write something besides these two letters. » And he did not cease to put us off for a whole month. Then one of those present said to Abba Moses, bishop of Wasîm : « My advice is that our father, the patriarch, should give something to this man, that he may deliver us from these adversaries who oppose and resist us. » But Abba Moses answered : « My son, it is not right that patriarchs and bishops should offer bribes to anyone, nor is it right that they should take bribes from anyone. And we have not had to endure persecution for a year or two years or thirty years, like our fathers; but we are now living in our own homes, and our churches are in our own possession, and God does not forsake us nor cease to help us. »

And during that week God requited those heretics through the prayers of our father. For the governor deprived Isa of his office of secretary and his Divan; and there came another in his place, a man of the sons of the judges of the Muslims, named Abu 'l-Ḥusain, who was an old man, tranquil, not given to showing favour to anyone, nor to taking bribes; and he was wise in his discourse, and just in his judgments. So they delivered us to him, that he might judge between us. And at the beginning of his judgment he said : « Which among you is the father of the Jacobites? » So those present pointed to Abba Michael, and said : « Behold him here! » Then he said : « The father of the Melkites? » And they showed him the other. Thereupon he said to Abba Michael : « Thou holdest the faith of James, bishop of Jerusalem, one of the disciples of the Lord Christ. » He said : « Yea, that is my belief. » Then he turned to the other and said : « Make known to me, Sir, who is thy father, and what is thy creed. » The patriarch of the Melkites said to him : « I hold the faith of Marcian the prince ». Upon that the judge rejoined : « Thou believest in the prince, and not in God? » And he continued : « Tell me who is the father of thy sect, and whence he came, that I may know and judge between you. » The Melkite answered : « My father, who first laid the foundation, was Nestorius. A council was assembled at Ephesus, at which the leader was Cyril, the spiritual father of this man. They had with them a monk from the Mount of Adriba, in the province of Ikhmîm, and they drove Nestorius out of the Church; for they were assisted by the princess at that time. But after that, God speedily raised up Marcian and the patriarch Leo, who agreed with Nestorius and his followers, and everywhere took possession of the churches, over which bishops have ruled up to this day. But our bishop at Alexandria, Proterius, was slain by the Alexandrians; and therefore the prince commanded that an army should be collected, and sent it to Alexandria, and bade the soldiers slay with the sword; and so they killed thirty thousand in one hour. »

When the judge heard that, he clapped his hands together, and said to those around him : « How cruel and tyrannical was that deed! » Then our spiritual father answered and said to the judge : « Behold, we have been occupied with this matter for two months. The governor delivered us over to Isa, son of Amir, as thou knowest, O judge, whom God loves on account of thy just judgments; and we wrote reports and gave them to Isa, but he would not settle our case, but asked of us more than we know ». So the judge commanded to bring forth the reports of the Jacobites and Melkites; and he read them and understood their contents, and was filled with astonishment at the difference between them; and he took the documents, and carried them to the governor, who read them, and was also astonished, and commanded him to pronounce his sentence, and dismissed him. Accordingly the judge came forth, and said to Cosmas : « Thou art a man without religion or God. For behold, the reports bear witness against thee that the church belongs to Abba Michael. We understand all that you have written; therefore go and write other reports besides these, and bring them to me ».

So we went out from his presence. But the Chalcedonians recognised that they were vanquished, and therefore they invented among themselves words of guile, and sent them to us. And Constantine, bishop of Miṣr, was with the messengers; and so he said to Abba Michael : « Thy Paternity knows what has happened to us at Alexandria for the sake of the faith; and to this day the dispute about our creed continues Therefore we desire that there be an agreement between thee and us concerning the church, and we wish to make a compact with thee, and to become one flock together. Send a message therefore to the father concerning this matter ». Then the blessed Abba Michael said to the bishops : « What do you say on this question? Shall we send a messenger to him, to hear his proposals? » But they said : « He is acting thus with guile deceitfully ». And Abba Moses said to them :

« O my fathers, in your hearts are seven thoughts, as it is written [1]. Think of things that you cannot bring to pass. But let us try them ». Then Abba Michael ordered a priest who was his scribe, and me the sinner, the writer of this history, and sent us to the Chalcedonian patriarch to hear his words. So when we arrived, they came out to meet us with joy; and when we had taken our seats, and the priest Mennas had addressed Cosmas with words of Scripture, for he was learned, then Cosmas heard from him the words of the patriarch. For Mennas began with the creed of our fathers, the Three Hundred and Eighteen, and Athanasius and Cyril, and confirmed the matter with a great and terrible oath, before the Melkite patriarch and Constantine, the Melkite bishop of Miṣr; and they made their confession. And Constantine the Melkite bishop of Miṣr said : « This was my faith before to-day, and I will hold it to my last breath : one Union, one God, one Lord, one Nature, namely the Lord Jesus Christ. He who does not believe thus is a Jew; and he who says that there are Two Natures in the One Christ, after the Union, is a stranger to the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, and his lot will be with Judas the Traitor. This then is my creed ». But when Anastasius heard that, he was angry and could not speak, and he waited for what was to happen after this. Then we departed to the fathers, and told them all that had taken place, and so they sent us

So when we returned to them, Cosmas their patriarch said : « I have another word which I desire to speak to you ». The priest answered : « Hide none of thy thoughts from us, for God looks at the heart, not at the face ». So he continued : « If unity be established, what will you do with me? » The priest Mennas replied : « Make known to us what thou desirest ». Cosmas answered : « I desire, if unity be established, that my church and your church should be one at Alexandria. And when your father, the patriarch, is present on the days of liturgies, I should be with him; and when he had finished the prayers, each of us should go forth to his own place; and none should hinder me from visiting any of the churches; and so likewise with regard to him ». Then the priest said to him : « These are words containing deceit ». Cosmas answered : « What thinkest thou? » So he said : « I will depart to my father, and bring the answer back to thee ». Then when the bishops heard this, Abba Moses cried aloud and said : « Our Lord Christ charges us not to call any father upon earth. But now if you approve what they say, then I will speak ». The patriarch said to him : « Speak now ». So he said : « If he consent to be made by us bishop over the whole of Egypt, and to become our brother, not our father, since Christ will keep thy Paternity that thou mayest guard his holy Church, then we will do it ». Then they went to Cosmas and informed him of this their decision; and he rejoiced, and his soul was satisfied. And Anastasius said : « You will surely make me also bishop of some see ». But the priest Mennas answered : « Knowest thou not that no man who seeks another degree for himself is fit to be a bishop? But the people of Misr will assist thee in this matter ». So Anastasius said to him : « If you do not consent, then be not troubled nor speak at all of this matter ». Then we went out from their presence.

After this we all visited Abd al-Malik, who had written a letter at that time to all the provinces of Egypt, commanding that the scribes and officials from every town should assemble before him; and when he admitted them, the palace was crowded with people in such numbers that none could hear anything through the multitude of voices. So we too entered, surrounded by many people. Then, when we had taken our seats, the bishop Constantine separated himself from the Melkites and sat with our bishops, begging them to receive him as one of themselves, and give him a see; and the assembled multitude and the people of the country around us were observing us, wishing to know what would be settled, and looking at the bishops, both orthodox and Chalcedonian. But after a while some of the people from Upper Egypt rushed upon Constantine, when they learnt that he was a Chalcedonian, that they might drive him away, until the orthodox bishops cast some of their garments over him, and surrounded him among themselves; for otherwise the people of Upper Egypt might have killed him. Then the latter cried and said : « Remove the wolves from the midst of the sheep! Flee from the ravenous lions that devour souls! Drive away the foxes that destroy the vineyard of the Lord of Ṣabaoth! Remove Judas from among the disciples of Christ! Let not your garments touch these unclean ones, O servants of Christ! »

Meanwhile Cosmas hid himself until their anger had abated; and then, after much questioning of our fathers, the people began to be a little pacified. Moreover when our bishops made it known to the people that Constantine had prayed them to receive him among the Theodosians, they rejoiced and cried in the midst of the palace : « Constantine has confessed the right faith, the faith of our orthodox fathers ». Then suddenly Ibrahim al-Mâḥiki, the official who was governor of Alexandria, appeared, for he had been sitting in an apartment of the palace, and with him a band of heretics, including the deacon Sergius, the patriarch's son, and two of the teachers of the heretics. So the people ran back and wished to flee. But there was a man of Damietta who had been exceedingly wicked, and for that reason I, the sinner, admonished him with a word that I had heard; and he leapt into the midst of the assembly, and stood and reviled me, and blasphemed the Holy Trinity. the top to the bottom in three pieces, and everyone in the palace cried, both Muslims and Christians : « There is no faith except the faith of the father, Abba Michael ». And there was a great shouting in the palace, and men rushed to see what had taken place, so that some of the people and the soldiers were injured or killed through the great press. Then Abd al-Malik commanded that all should be sent out of the palace.

And on the morrow he commanded the judge to decide the matter in question, saying : « Settle their affair, and let them depart. » Accordingly the judge sat down with the members of the Divans, namely the scribes and the chief personages of the government. When they had taken their seats, they said to the patriarch, Abba Michael : « Wilt thou swear that this church rightfully belongs to thee and thy fathers? » The patriarch answered : « Our Law commands me not to swear, whether truly or falsely; but I will write a report, and declare the truth to thee therein ». Then the judge said to the heretic Cosmas : « Wilt thou swear that this church is thine, that I may give it over to thee? » So he replied : « Yea, I will swear ». Then the judge shook his head, as if mocking him, and said to him : « Where hast thou a witness to this statement that it belongs to thee, even if thou shalt swear to it? » Then he said to our father, Abba Michael : « Hast thou anyone to offer testimony that this church belonged to thy fathers? » He replied : « Yea, I have one who will be my witness of that fact, from the day that it was built until now ». The judge asked :

« How many days is it since it was built? » Abba Michael answered : « Three hundred and fifty years » So the judge said to him : « And do the witnesses live to this day from that time? Thou speakest to me in parables. Make the truth known to me ». Then the patriarch answered and said : « Verily my father Theophilus and his successor Timothy were the builders of this church, and it is they also who testify to me that Theophilus founded it and set up its rows of pillars, for there is his name written upon them; and, when he died, Timothy erected the remainder, since there is his name inscribed. These are my witnesses who testify to this day ». Thereupon the judge sent his confidential friends, accompanied by the secretaries and the interpreters, and they ascertained what was written upon the pillars, and found that it was as Abba Michael had declared. And the judge enquired carefully into the truth of the matter, and reiterated his questions concerning it, and discovered that the patriarch's account was correct. So, when he had tested the truth of his words and proved it, he delivered the church to us, and dismissed us with congratulations and honour. Thus we recovered our church once more.

Now our father John, patriarch of Antioch, who had been a bishop, had a dispute during many days with his bishops, and could not make peace with them; therefore he wrote letters to the prince. And he had written a synodical epistle, but had not been able to find means of sending it to Egypt till this time. So when the messengers arrived, and the Father Abba Michael had received the synodical and other letters from them, he read them, and was greatly distressed by the disagreement between the patriarch and his bishops. For they said that he was a mere bishop and no patriarch, and that they had not been able to give him the title of patriarch in the days of Hisham. Then Abba Michael summoned all the seniors among his bishops in the land of Egypt, and the letters were read to them. Thereupon they said : « We will not write a letter nor despatch it thither, for this is a difficult matter. If they desire to expel their patriarch, the prince will say to them : Nay, for he is a bishop. But if we write and advise them not to depose him, the bishops will be divided, as they have said in their letters. Rather leave the matter, Father, remaining as it was ». And accordingly he did so.

Now I desire to record a little out of much that the Lord did by the hand of the bishop Abba Moses, and concerning the gift of prophecy and of the healing of diseases which he received from the Lord. Therefore believe my words with a pure heart!

city of Wasîm, there was in the church a youth, who had been paralysed in his hands and feet from birth. He was now fifteen years old, and the martyr Saint George had appeared to him, and said : « Thou shalt not be healed except by the hand of the bishop, Abba Moses ». So this youth came, and would have touched my father's garment; but the multitude around him prevented him. Therefore he cried, saying : « Make the sign of the cross, my Father, over my paralysed limbs ». Then the bishop made the sign of the cross over his hands and feet, and we went on our way. But when we returned according to the will of God, that youth came out to meet us, walking and leaping with the people of the city, and recounting what had happened to him, and glorifying God, and thanking his good servant, the bishop. And this bishop also cleansed the lepers, and cast out devils, and did mighty works, like the Disciples.

Now there was in those days great trouble in the East on account of the bishops. Moreover at that time great hosts came against Marwân, and they met in battle; and much blood was shed among them. Then Abd al-Malik assembled the officers of his army at Misr, and imprisoned them for seven days, and also confined the secretaries of state, and the chiefs of the towns and superintendents of inherited property, and required them to send in their accounts, and to pay what they owed. Then he summoned the Father, Abba Michael, to Misr, in order that he might pay the taxes on his churches. But when we came before Abd al-Malik, he demanded of us what we could not pay, and therefore he commanded that we should be put in prison, and that a great block of wood should be fastened to the patriarch's foot, and a heavy iron collar to his neck. And there was nobody with him except Abba Moses, bishop of Wasîm, and Abba Theodore, bishop of Miṣr, and Abba Elias Paul, son of Abba Moses in the Spirit. Then they put us into a dark chamber, where we could not see the sun, and which had no window, for it was hewn in the rock. And our father, the patriarch, was greatly tormented through being thus loaded with iron, from the 11th of Tut to the 12th of Babah, seeing no sunlight all that time. While he was in the prison, there were besides him three hundred men; and there were women also imprisoned, in greater straits than the men; and there was sadness and weeping, and much distress at the end of the day, when the governor of the prison shut the door upon us, and went away; and he did not return till the seventh hour of the day. The sick used to come to the patriarch in prison, that he might bless them, and then they rejoiced; and Christians and Muslims, and even Berbers, came to him, and confessed their sins which they had committed; and so did the prisoners, some of whom said that they had been in prison three years, and others four. And he consoled them and exhorted them to patience, saying to them : « If you vow to God that you will not return to your former deeds, God will

As for our fathers, the bishops, they could not change their garments nor their caps for the space of seventeen days, while they remained close by the father patriarch; for they were chained to him by their souls though not by iron. And the superintendent of the governor's table was a believer and a good man, who provided for the patriarch; and he used to visit us, and brought for us into the prison what we needed; while I, the sinner, was engaged in ministering to those three bloodless martyrs night and day.

And that year there had been a great pestilence among young infants at Miṣr, so that they all died. And while I was lying at the feet of the patriarch one night, and he was teaching me from the Scriptures, and answering all my questions about them, I asked him concerning the death of the infants. And I said to him : « Thinkest thou, Father, that God takes them on account of the sins of their parents or for some other cause? » Then he answered : « Do not suppose, my son, that this is the cause. Then when God created a new heaven and a new earth, and formed man in his own image and likeness[1], since it lay in God's foreknowledge that Satan loved pride, he bade him behold Adam and the beauty of his countenance. So Satan took with him the host over which God had made him leader, and went to the place where Adam was; and, when he saw it he was filled with admiration of it. And he said to his followers : I desire to set up for myself a throne upon the clouds, and the high mountains shall be beneath me, and I will be like the Most High; and the whole world shall be under my power, and I will rule over it. Then when he ascended again to heaven, God said to him : Admirest thou what thou hast seen, and art thou pleased with the world that has been created? For he knew his secret thoughts. Then God said to Satan : I have made thee lord over the world. And God said this to Satan in order that he might not fall from the glory in which he was. But Satan kept evil in his heart, and in his thoughts there was wickedness; and after that he considered and said : I desire to know the nature of the Godhead, so that when I go down to the world I may act accordingly, and may no longer have need of God. For this was the design that Satan had conceived. And, wishing to behold the Godhead, he entered into the midst of the Angels suddenly; but God commanded ten thousand of the heavenly angelic Powers to cast him down to the lowest Hell in outer darkness, him and all his companions. This is what God revealed to Gregory Theologus, who wrote it down for us. Glory be to God for ever and ever. Amen ».

Then I questioned the patriarch again, saying : « Will God have patience with these unbelieving rulers who commit these crimes against us at all times, and will not release us from these bonds? » He answered : « Be patient, my son, and be of good cheer. When we go forth from this place, we shall fall into worse misfortunes than this. Therefore be patient now, for none shall receive his reward without suffering; but he who endures to the end shall be saved. And thou wilt see what shall take place hereafter, for in these two rulers there is no good ».

Then when seventeen days of the before mentioned month were over, while we were still in this distress, the governor commanded that he should be brought before him. So we came into his presence, and he demanded the money of the patriarch, saying to him : « None of thy churches pays taxes, and I require of thee that which is rightfully due from them. » And he pressed him sorely. Then the patriarch answered : « If it be so, permit me to depart to Upper Egypt; and whatever the Christians may give me and supply me with I will bring to thee. » Then the governor released him, and we quitted his presence, and journeyed to Upper Egypt. At that time we suffered greatly from the cold; for there was snow at night, and heat in the day-time from the sun. And the people of Egypt had perished through oppression and poverty and taxation. And the father, Abba Michael, was fatigued during our journey, and suffered much. While we travelled, he healed many that were sick, merely by making the sign of the Cross; and he cast out unclean spirits from among the people, and converted many who had gone astray from the orthodox faith, for God helped him. Then we returned to Miṣr on the night of the 21st of Tubah, the night on which our Lady, the Virgin Mary, went to her rest. And that night there came great wrath from God, for there was a great earthquake in the land, and many houses were ruined in all the cities; and none was saved from them, not a single soul; and likewise on the sea many ships were sunk on that night. This happened all over the East, from the city of Gaza to the furthest extremity of Persia. And they counted the cities that were wrecked that night, and they were six hundred cities and villages, with a vast destruction of men and beasts. But the land of Egypt was uninjured, except only Damietta. And at Miṣr there was only great fear, without any death or ruin of houses; for though the beams in the doorways and walls were moved out of their places, they went back again to their places after two hours. We were assured by one whose word we trust that none of the churches of the orthodox nor of their dwellings was destroyed throughout the East. But the father, Abba Michael, bade all the inhabitants of Miṣr and the neighbourhood prolong their fasting and prayers. So when the misbeliever, Abd al-Malik, saw what had taken place through the wrath of God, he accepted the alms given by the Christians to the patriarch, and released him.

Now I have omitted much without writing it down, that the history might not become too long and weary the reader, but I am constrained to record briefly a matter which must not be passed over. That is that there was at Dongola, a city of the Nubians, a king named Mercurius, who was called the New Constantine, for he became by his beautiful conduct like one of the Disciples; and the Lord gave him a son whom he named Zacharias. When king Mercurius died, Zacharias did not choose to become king, but occupied himself with the word of God and the salvation of his soul, and gave up his rank as king, and appointed to the kingly office a kinsman of his named Simon, who was orthodox, and walked in the excellent path of Mercurius. When Simon died, Zacharias adopted a valiant youth attached to the palace, named Abraham, and made him king; but he was proud and wicked. And the bishop of the capital city used to warn him and instruct him, but he paid no heed to him, and therefore a dispute took place between the king and the bishop. So the king wrote a letter to the father patriarch, Abba Michael, in which he said with an oath: « If thou do not excommunicate Cyriacus, I will make all my country worship idols ». For he had written concerning that bishop absurd calumnies and false testimonies. But when the patriarch had read this letter, he wrote letters of peace to the king. Yet the king was not satisfied, but wrote other letters worse than the first, full of false testimonies, and despatched them to Alexandria by Cyriacus, the holy bishop. So the father assembled the bishops, and formed a synod in the city of Alexandria. And when they had met together, he produced the letters, which were read aloud; but the bishops recognised that their allegations were absurd. Then indeed they spoke a word concerning the king of that country, fearing lest Satan should bring corruption upon it; and therefore they prayed the bishop Cyriacus to reside in one of the monasteries of Alexandria, until the wrath of the king should subside; but he refused to do that. So, when they saw that he would not listen to them, they said : « Depart whithersoever thou wilt, in order to abide there. » But they would not allow him to celebrate the Liturgy in the churches of Egypt. And they ordained him whom the king had sent to them, a man named John, saying to Cyriacus : « If this matter is not from God, thou wilt see what will happen, and wilt return to thy see once more. For we have not removed thee from thy see by excommunication, but on account of the wickedness of the king, and his evil intentions ».

But when they rose up to depart, each to his own place, there appeared a great wonder. For there was a great board over the throne of the patriarch, Abba Michael, on which was a painting of John Chrysostom; and, after the bishop had been removed from his see, the cords of the picture broke, and it fell into the midst of the bishops, and continued to move and leap until it had passed beyond them. Therefore they went and took it up, and restored it to its former place. Then it did the same thing a second and a third time; for as often as they hung it up it fell again, until it reached a certain place in the church and remained there. Now that bishop resembled the picture of John Chrysostom, for his cheeks were almost free from hair, so that he seemed to have no beard, and this was one of the characteristics of John Chrysostom's face. And the bishop Cyriacus was an old man, eighty years of age on that day; and his appearance was like that of an angel of God. Then the bishops dispersed to their own districts; and Cyriacus departed to one of the monasteries of Nubia, while John, the new bishop, went to the capital city. Now trustworthy persons have testified to me that no rain fell upon that city during the remainder of the life of Cyriacus, the bishop, and that every year the people were visited by a pestilence, and that those who bore false witness against him were suddenly struck blind. And he lived to be one hundred and four years old. Then he prayed God to remove him from the body; and, when he was dead, the people of his country visited his tomb, and prayed him with many tears to beseech God to send down rain upon them; and this took place so that their country was fertilized, and the pestilence ceased from them.

So when king Zacharias saw these things, he banished king Abraham to an island in the midst of the river, and appointed a king named Mark instead of him; for Zacharias had been father of the kings up to this time. Then the friends of Mark went secretly with guile, to slay Abraham in his place of exile. But, when the partisans of king Abraham learnt this, they conspired against king Mark; and, while he was praying in the church before the sanctuary, they slew him, in the sixth month of his reign. Then they set up a king named Cyriacus, an honest and virtuous man, who has remained king to the day on which I write this history.

Now letters had been sent to this king from Egypt, and had reached him while the father, Abba Michael, was in prison with us. And Abd al-Malik heard of these communications, and therefore he seized the patriarch, and kept him in custody. Then king Cyriacus marched forth from the land of the Nubians towards Egypt with a great army, including a hundred thousand horsemen, with a hundred thousand horses and a hundred thousand camels. And we were informed by one who had witnessed it with his own eyes that the horses which the Nubians rode used to fight with their forefeet and hindfeet in battle as their riders fought upon their backs, and that they were small horses, no higher than asses. And when they approached Miṣr that they might capture the city, and had encamped at the Pool known to this day as the Pool of the Ethiopians, they plundered and slew and made prisoners of the Muslims. And they had already treated the Muslims of Upper Egypt in like manner. And the king before he reached Miṣr had sent an envoy, called the Eparch, one of the great men of the kingdom, to Abd al-Malik, bidding him release the patriarch; but Abd al-Malik seized that envoy and imprisoned him with the patriarch. But when the governor heard of the arrival of the king before Miṣr, not having any means of resisting him, and being greatly afraid of him, he released his envoy, the Eparch, from prison. So the latter went forth to meet the king, having, previously made an engagement with Abd al-Malik, and sworn to induce the king to return with his army to his own country, and not to let him approach his fortresses nor besiege him. Now the Muslims were in the habit of kidnapping the Nubians, and selling them as slaves in Egypt. So the king, after carrying off much plunder from the Muslims, led back his army, because the Eparch informed him that the patriarch had been released, and had been kindly treated by Abd al-Malik, and himself bade the Nubians return homewards with his blessing.

Now many of the tribe of Al-Kais worshipped an idol named Salkîṭ, and therefore the king of the Nubians conquered them and plundered them, and his army carried off the booty which they had taken from them. Then Abd al-Malik sent to the patriarch, bidding him write to the king of the Nubians. So Abba Michael wrote letters of peace to Cyriacus, in which he prayed for him, and blessed him and his followers; and the king returned without fighting a battle. Now these events took place in the hundred and thirtieth year after the foundation of the empire of the Muslims. And there were under the supremacy of Cyriacus, king of the Nubians, thirteen kings, ruling the kingdom and the country. He was the orthodox Ethiopian king of Al-Mukurrah; and he was entitled the Great King, upon whom the crown descended from Heaven; and he governed as far as the southern extremities of the earth, for he is the Greek king, fourth[1] of the kings of the earth; and none of the other kingdoms stands up against him, but their kings attend him when he passes through their territory. And he is under the jurisdiction of Mark the Evangelist, for the patriarch of the Jacobites in Egypt exercises authority over him, and over all the kings of the Abyssinians and the Nubians; and he has in his country an orthodox bishop whom the patriarch ordains as metropolitan, and who ordains for the king the bishops and the priests in that land. And when the metropolitan dies, the patriarch of Alexandria appoints another for him, whom he chooses, and ordains him for that people.

Now when we came out of prison, many people came together to us, and prayed the father patriarch to celebrate the Liturgy for them, and to give them with his holy hand the communion of the Body and the Precious Blood. So they conducted him to the church of the two Martyrs, Sergius and Bacchus; and he celebrated the Liturgy for them that day, and communicated to them the Holy Mysteries, and gave them an exhortation and instruction.

And there came a man seeking to communicate, as soon as the brethren began to make their communion; but the patriarch refused him, and, though he returned, would not give him the oblation. And when Abba Michael had dismissed the congregation, and sent the people away in peace, that man appeared before the father, weeping, and said : « I desire thee, Father, to tell me for what cause thou didst refuse me communion ». The spiritual father answered and said to him : « My son, I also am a sinner. None but the Lord Christ refused thee communion. He it was who forbad thee to receive it. Therefore declare now what thou hast done in the midst of this assembly of thy brethren, lest any of them do like thee ». Then that man cried aloud, saying : « I pray thee, my Lord and Father, if it was a sin which I committed, forgive it me, for I will not be guilty of it again ». The father said to him : « Thou must confess it ». So he said to him : « I have been accustomed to break my fast in my own house, and to come after my breakfast to the church to communicate. Thus I did to-day. And afterwards when I heard that thou wouldst give communion to thy people, I said in my heart : I will go and receive the communion from his holy hand. And I did so out of love for thee in my humility. Now I have declared this to thee who didst refuse me. But in Upper Egypt there are many who do this without knowing that it is a sin ». When the Father heard that, he commanded that letters should be written to every place, ordering that none of the faithful should communicate unless fasting, and that none should make

But Egypt found no tranquillity nor rest during the government of Abd al-Malik, for not one of the family of the princes of the Ishmaelites who ruled over them was like him. And he did to the monasteries what was not lawful, because he hated the Christians; for as he pleased to do, so he did. Yet the Lord Christ, in whose hand are the hearts of princes, turned his heart to love Abba Michael the patriarch; therefore he invited him to his palace, and we accompanied him; and he begged the patriarch to pray for him. And the governor's daughter, who was four years old, was possessed by an unclean spirit, and so her father requested the patriarch to pray over her. Then Abba Michael took oil, and blessed it, and anointed her with it; and the devil went out of her immediately. Thus the governor began to love the Christians, because he loved the father patriarch; and he also loved the bishops, and showed them honour.

Now our father, Abba Michael, was sweet in speech, beautiful in countenance, perfect in stature, decent in his attire, well-formed and dignified; and his words were like a sword against the rebellious, and his teaching was like salt to people of virtue and modesty. And the hand of God was with him in those hardships which he endured through Abd al-Malik. And the church at Alexandria had suffered greatly in the time of the late patriarch Alexander, when its marble and glorious woodwork, which were priceless, were taken away from it. So the Father Michael provided money for it, and restored it, and improved it. And he built other churches to the east and west of the town, and his buildings were completed in his lifetime.

And on a certain day the governor of Alexandria desired to launch the ships of the fleet on the sea. And there was a congregation of the orthodox in the Church of our Lady Mary, of about ten thousand persons. And a young man of the Muslims saw, painted on the wall, a picture of the Lord Christ upon the Cross, while the soldier with the spear was piercing his side. So he said to the Christians, tempting them : « What is this man upon the Cross? » They answered : « This is the sign of our God Christ, who died upon the Cross for the salvation of the world. » Thereupon that young man took a rod, and mounted to the upper gallery, and pierced the picture in the other side, namely the left, mocking and blaspheming at the Christian's words. And immediately the form of the young man became stretched, as if he were himself crucified, after the likeness of the picture which he had pierced, and a great pain seized him, as if he had been pierced in the side in like manner, and his hand clove to the rod with which he had pierced it, and no man could take it out of his hand; and he remained fixed in the midst of the congregation, between heaven and

So he continued all day, crying aloud : « O ye people, I am pierced in the side. » Then the Muslims cried to the Christians with a loud voice, glorifying God, the doer of wonders, and begged them to pray to God for the man's release. So the Christians prayed, saying Kyrie eleison many times. But that young man could not descend from the place where he was, until one of the Muslims said to him : « Verily unless thou shalt confess the faith of the Christians, and say that this picture is the likeness of Christ, the Son of God, and profess their creed, and believe like them, he will never let thee come down. » Then he accepted the words of that Muslim, and confessed that it was the picture of Christ, and said : « I am a Christian, and will die in the religion of Christ. » After that confession he descended into the midst of the assembly, and departed to the monasteries, and was baptized there.

Now the prince at that time was Marwân, who ruled from Persia to Spain. His hand was very heavy upon his soldiers, and for a time the Muslims fought one against the other, and shed one another's blood, so that on one day twenty thousand or thirty thousand or even seventy thousand were slain. And they did not cease from war during the seven years of Marwân's reign, because he had usurped the government over them. And in the seventh year a young man named Abd Allah, had a dream, in which the voice of a certain one said to him three times : « Fight against Marwân, fight. By God thou wilt overcome him. » This young man, Abd Allah, was a Bedouin, and lived in tents in the desert; and his father was an old man, named Abu Muslim, to whom the same vision came in a dream as to the young man, Abd Allah; and the old man wrote an account of the dream, and fastened it on the door of his tent. Therefore, when the Muslims saw it, they came together to him in order to know what had happened; and, when he told them, they said : « We will help thee; and, if God shall give thee the victory, we will make thee prince over us. » Accordingly, many of the tribes assembled to him, when they heard of this; and twenty thousand horsemen gathered together with him. But they had no weapons, and so they cut branches from the palm-trees, and fastened spear-heads to them, and went forth to fight, the power of God being with them. Thereupon Marwân came out against them, accompanied by a hundred thousand fighting men, well equipped, and provided with weapons and coats of mail and helmets; and the two armies met. Then Abd Allah divided his army into two parts; and when Marwân saw them, he said, as Goliath the giant said to David[1] : « Hast thou come out to meet me like a dog? » Then Marwân sent out against Abd Allah forty thousand horsemen in many-coloured garments, wearing cuirasses and iron armour, whereas most of Abd Allah's soldiers were footmen. Yet Abd Allah's men slew Marwân's men with God's help, so that not one of them was saved; for God gave to the former the victory over the latter, as the prophet Moses says [1] : « One man, if God helps him, shall put to flight a thousand, and two shall terrify a host. »

And Abu Muslim saw the angel of the Lord, with a golden rod in his hand, on the top of which was a Cross, putting his enemies to flight; for, wherever the Cross approached, he saw them fall dead before it. So the followers of Abd Allah and Abu Muslim took the horses and weapons of the enemy.

Then Marwân again sent another forty thousand horsemen against them, at the fourth hour of the day, from behind rocks; but God delivered them into their hands, and they captured their horses and weapons. So, when Marwân saw that, he fled. And he executed the following stratagem. He brought out what he possessed of money and vessels and furniture, and put the gold in bags, and scattered it along the road, while he was fleeing, accompanied by twenty thousand horsemen, who remained with him. But Abd Allah and Abu Muslim did not understand his deceit, and so, as they pursued him, they busied themselves with seizing the money and the weapons for seven days, so that Marwân escaped and crossed the Euphrates.

But many of his followers were drowned, and he set fire to the boats, and none reached the shore but he and eight thousand men with him.

So the old man Abu Muslim bade his soldiers make crosses of every kind, and place them on their breasts, saying to them : « By means of this sign God has given us the victory, and it has conquered the empire for us. » And his followers multiplied, for men came to them from every place at which they arrived : from Khorassan and Sidon and the Euphrates and the land of the Romans; and all that heard of them in distant lands. And at every city which they captured, their followers established a camp.

But as for Marwân, he set fire to every place that he reached in his flight. When Abu Muslim and Abd Allah came to the Euphrates, and saw the burnt boats, they put on black garments, and left their heads unshaven, and neglected their wives, and continued to fast and pray for six months, until God gave their enemy into their hands. Then they took the boats that they could get, and crossed the Euphrates, and pursued Marwân. And when they reached a place where there were Christians, they marked it out by the sign of the Cross, which they also had marked on their tents and garments. And the Muslims among them wore black garments. And him who was without these two signs they put to death, because the followers of Marwân were Persians, and therefore did not approve of these things. And so, when they found them, they killed them.

Then Marwân went into the public treasury at Damascus, for that was the capital of the Omeyyads, and brought forth much money and jewels and treasures, and burnt the rest with fire. And he went on doing thus, till he had laid waste seven provinces with fire. When Abd al-Malik, the governor of Egypt, heard the news, he feared that Marwân would summon him to fight, and therefore he wrote to him a letter with guile, inviting him to Egypt, and saying: « Thy enemies cannot enter this country. » Accordingly, Marwân marched thither, slaying the chiefs of the towns and provinces through which he passed, and seizing their money. So also he did in the monasteries of the monks, which he wrecked and robbed of their money. And there was in Palestine a clean and decent monastery, which entertained thousands of travellers, and contained a thousand monks; and it was called Dair Mût, and in Coptic, the Monastery of Abba Harmanus. Maximus and his brother Domitius were first received here; and it was Abba Harmanus who took the Tome of Leo, and went to the tombs of his fathers, accompanied by the soldiers of the prince, and cried over their tombs with a loud voice, saying: « Think not that you are asleep, and that this does not concern you! As the Lord lives, if you answer me not, I will take out your bones and burn them with fire. Tell me what you think. Shall I receive the Tome of Leo, or the Faith of Nicaea? Tell me plainly and speedily. » Then they all answered with one voice, crying and saying: « Cursed be Leo, the misbeliever, the soul-devouring lion, and his foul Tome! And cursed be Marcian, the misbeliever, and the vile Pulcheria! And cursed be the Council of Chalcedon, the six hundred and thirty heretical bishops; and cursed be all that receive them. And cursed be those that make Christ the Son of God into Two Natures after the Union. » So, when the blessed Abba Harmanus heard this, he fell upon the ground. And when the noble who brought the Tome saw him, and heard their words addressed to him, he shaved his head, and became a monk with many others. Afterwards this saint was counted worthy of martyrdom; for when Marcian, the prince, was informed of what he had done, he sent and put him to death. And since that time there has been a body of the orthodox remaining in that glorious monastery. So when Marwân arrived at the aforesaid monastery, he demanded of them a sum of money amounting to three weights; and he severely chastised the superior of the monastery and his assistant, for he killed those two; and he plundered the monastery, and continued his march, accompanied by his army. Then, when they were at a short distance from the monastery, there was a hermit upon a pillar, a very old man, who had been there many years, an orthodox Theodosian.

So one of Marwân's friends said : « Verily all that this old monk says comes to pass, for he speaks the truth. » And he came up to that hermit, and asked him what would be his fate. So the old man said in a low voice, like the voice of Jeremias the prophet[1] : « If I tell thee the truth, thou wilt slay me; yet will I declare what God has revealed to me. That which God has told me of thee is this. With the measure with which thou hast measured it shall be measured to thee. As thou hast made mothers childless, so shall thy mother be childless. And thy path shall be very terrible to all that behold thee; for thy children and thy wives and all that are thine shall be taken captive; and he who is now pursuing thee shall take thy empire, and none of thy family shall reign after thee for ever. And thine enemies shall put thee to flight, until thou comest to Arsinoites, to Cleopatra. All this shall befall thee this year in the month of Misri. » When Marwân heard this, he commanded that the pillar should be overthrown; and he brought down the old man, and burnt him alive in the fire.

Then Marwân arrived in Egypt on the twentieth day of the month of Baunah, in the year 467 of the Martyrs. And before these things happened, some of the Bashmurites had rebelled against Abd al-Malik, under their leader Mennas, son of Apacyrus, besides other insurgents, inhabitants of Shubra near Sanbaṭ. And they seized that province, and refused to pay taxes to Abd al-Malik or to the chief of the Divân of Miṣr; and at last the Lord visited them, and gave them the victory. For Abd al-Malik brought out an army against them, but they put him to flight by the power of God, and slew his soldiers with the edge of the sword. And he despatched another army, and a fleet of ships on the river, and by the power of God they put all his men to flight or slew them. And when Marwân reached Egypt, all this was made known to him. So he wrote letters and a decree of pardon for those rebels; but as they would not accept him, he despatched against them a great army of Egyptian Muslims, and of those who came in his company from Syria. But this army could not reach them at all, because they fortified themselves in marshy places, which could only be approached by men marching in single file; and if a man's foot slipped from the path, he would sink into the mud and perish. And as the troops watched the Bashmurites from a distance, the latter marched out against them at night by ways which they knew, and took the soldiers by surprise, and killed those whom they could, and carried off their goods and their horses; and as the troops grew tired of these attacks, they marched away and left them.

Then Abd Allah, the prince, arrived with a great army in the province of Damascus, and divided his troops between two brave commanders, one of whom was named Ṣâliḥ, son of Ali, and the other Abu Aun, his friend, saying to them : « If you shall find Marwàn and capture him, I will promote you two to be princes; and to Abu Aun I will give Egypt. » Then he sent with Ṣâliḥ sixty thousand horsemen and sixty captains; and he gave to Abu Aun forty thousand horsemen and four hundred officers. So the two arrived at Damascus, the governor of which was Marwân's son-in-law, having married his eldest daughter; but, as he submitted to them, they retained him in office. Then they marched on to Egypt. When they arrived at Gaza, the inhabitants told them : « The people of Damascus have not put on the black, nor remained obedient to you. » So they returned in wrath, and slew a great number of the chiefs of the people of Damascus, and killed the governor, Marwân's son-in-law, and took the daughter of Marwân prisoner. And when the news reached Marwân, he reviewed his troops, and found that those who had come with him were eight thousand in number. Then he gave orders to his subjects, the natives of the land, saying : « If any of the people of Egypt refuse to enter into my religion, and to pray as I do, and to adopt my creed, I will slay him and impale his body. But whoever shall enter with me into my religion I will clothe with a robe of honour, and I will mount him upon a horse, and will place his name in my Divan, and make him rich. » In consequence of these words he was soon followed by a thousand persons, who recited his prayer; and accordingly he gave to each one ten dinars. Then two thousand Muslims of Egypt joined him, besides those whom he had released from prison, and those who served him of the troops of the army of the empire. And he sent his sister's son to Alexandria, accompanied by one of the chiefs of his army, and commanded him to enlist the Ishmaelites, on condition that they recited his prayer. For there was at Alexandria a chief man and leader of the Muslims, named Al-Aswâd, to whom many men had gathered while the Muslims were fighting the Romans; and Marwân had commanded those whom he sent thither to kill him and ten of his officers, because he had not come to him at Miṣr; but Al-Aswâd had a friend at Miṣr in attendance on Marwân and an associate of his, who heard of this and wrote to Al-Aswâd to make known to him what had been done, before those men arrived at Alexandria. When the Alexandrians learnt what Marwân intended, they swore fidelity to Al-Aswâd; and he and they became of one heart, and so when Marwân's envoy and his companions arrived, the Alexandrians arrested them, and cast them into prison. Al-Aswâd gathered a large body, from Alexandria and Maryûṭ and Al-Buḥairah, of Muslims who lived in those districts, and placed them outside the wall of Alexandria to keep the roads. Therefore when Marwân was informed, he sent a great army under an Amir and chief, named Kauzârâ, who was like a wild beast in form and character, and of great courage, and with him were five hundred fighting men; and Marwân commanded them to lay Alexandria waste. So they encamped at a place named Bâkûm at a distance from Alexandria. When Al-Aswâd heard this, he sent against them his brother and five hundred men with him, to reconnoitre; and when Marwân's followers saw them, they thought that they were an army from the town, and that there was none left therein who would fight them except these. So they rose up against them, and killed most of them, and the remainder fled and returned to the city, while the enemy pursued them. When they reached Al-Aswâd and his companions, they cried saying : « Our city is taken. » So they all fled, their number being thirty thousand, and Al-Aswâd escaped and hid himself. And Marwân's army entered the city with Kauzârâ, and took possession of it, and killed many of the inhabitants, and plundered its officials, and their children and wives were taken prisoners, and their goods were seized. And the Father Abba Michael was captured; and Kauzârâ said to him : « How couldst thou permit thy children, the Christians, to fight against us? » By this he meant the Bashmurites. And he reproved the patriarch with many words, and demanded money of him. But, as Abba Michael had nothing, he put him in prison, and fastened a mass of iron to his feet. And the patriarch's disciples and some of his priests had fled on account of what had happened at Alexandria, and none remained save Abba Mennas, the priest, who was the oeconomus of the church of Saint Mark the Evangelist and Disciple, and Valentinus, the deacon and secretary of the Cell, and Bartholomew, the monk of Samannûd; for they were bound together with Abba Michael. Then Kauzârâ also seized Cosmas, patriarch of the Melkites, and put his feet in the stocks, together with the feet of our father and patriarch. But after five days, Cosmas raised from his congregation and his church the sum of a thousand dinars, and paid them to Kauzârâ, who thereupon released him. And Kauzârâ sent to our father, and said to him : « Do likewise, and I will release thee. » But he answered : « There is nothing in my church; therefore I give myself instead of the money, and thou must do with me what thou wilt. » Then he pressed him sore, till the end of nine days. After that he sent for him, and laid his hand upon him, and dragged him on his face, and threw him on his knees. And there was a rod in his hand, so he struck him with it two hundred times on his head with all his might and main. But the Lord Christ was Abba Michael's helper and protected him, so that he suffered no hurt. Then Kauzârâ commanded that the patriarch's head should be cut off; and they dragged him along like a dumb sheep. And when they had gone a short distance from that misbeliever, Abba Michael drew down his cap over his face, so that his head might be taken off, and then he readily with joy stretched out his neck.

And the swordsman put forth his hand, and drew his sword, and cried, saying : « Shall I take off his head? » For it was according to custom that he should ask permission three times. And, when he asked permission for the second time, the Amir gave it to him. Then God put a thought into Kauzârâ's heart, and he said : « How does it profit us to kill this old man? For he forbad the Bashmurites to fight with us, and wrote to them, but they would not listen to hin. Rather let us carry him with us to Rosetta, and make him write to them again, and tell them that all that which has happened to him is on their account. » So Kauzârâ commanded that the patriarch should be released.

When the Bashmurites heard of these events, they attacked those who were besieging them, and slew them or routed them, they being at a distance of a two days'journey. And those who escaped death went to Marwân, and made known to him what had happened to them. And when Marwân learnt that his enemies were coming after him, and had killed his son-in-law, his daughter's husband, the governor of Damascus, he sent a letter by those who had fled to him in order to escape from the Bashmurites, saying to his followers : « Come to me speedily, for I have need of you. And pillage every town that you reach, and slay the inhabitants ». Therefore those miscreants marched into Upper Egypt, and killed many of the officials, and carried off their goods, and took captive their wives and servants and children. And they burnt the monasteries of the monks, and carried off the nuns, until they came to the Eastern district. And there was in those parts a convent of nuns, virgins who lived there as the brides of Christ, thirty in number. So Marwân's troops took them prisoners. And there was among them a young maiden, who had entered the convent when she was three years old; and when they saw her they marvelled at her beauty, saying : « We have never beheld among human beings a form like hers. » So they took her, and removed her from the midst of her sisters, and consulted together as to what they should do with regard to her, some saying : « Let us cast lots for her, » and others : « Let us take her to the prince. » And, while they were saying these things, the maiden asked of them : « Where is your leader, that I may let him know of something that is worth money, so that you may let me go? For I am a servant of God, and it is not lawful for you to profane my service. But, if I make known to you that thing by which you shall gain money, you will send me back to my convent. » So their commander answered her, saying : « I am he. » She said to him : « My fathers were fighting men, brave and strong, and gave me a medicament, with which they used to anoint themselves when they went out to fight, so that iron did them no hurt, but swords and spears became like wax candles before them. If then thou wilt let me go free, I will give this drug to thee. all, so that thou mayest know the truth of my words. » But she only said this because she desired to die by the sword, that she might not be contaminated by the defilements of those miscreants, nor her pure body be polluted by them. Then she entered her chamber, and brought out a phial containing oil, which the holy men had blessed, and which was preserved in her possession; and she anointed her neck and face and all her body with it, and prayed kneeling upon her knees, and stretched out her neck. So those ignorant men thought that the thing was true, and knew not what was in her heart. Then she said to them : « Let him that is strong among you, and has a sharp sword, display his strength upon me; for you will see the glory of God in this medicament. » Thereupon a young man sprang forward with a sword of which he was proud. And she covered her face with her pallium, and laid down her head, saying : « Strike with all thy might, and spare not. » So he struck at the holy martyr, and her head fell. Then they recognised what her aim had been, and that she had eluded them; and so they repented and were exceedingly sad, and great fear overwhelmed them. And after her they touched no more of the nuns and virgins, but left them in peace and departed glorifying God.

Then Marwân wrote to Kauzârâ, whom he had despatched to Alexandria, bidding him hasten to him without delay; but, when he reached Rosetta, he was informed that the Bashmurites had slain the Muslims in the town and laid it waste, and burnt it with fire, and also that the enemy was at hand. So he delivered the father patriarch to one of the officers, that he might conduct him to Marwân. Then I journeyed and informed my father, Abba Moses, of what had taken place, on account of the power of prophecy which God had given him, and the miracles which he worked. Therefore ye must believe truly in that which I am about to say, for I saw it with my own eyes. That is that before Marwân came to Egypt, and before there was any fighting there, Abba Moses had made known, by revelation from God, what would become of the princes, and what would happen to the churches and faithful people of Christ. For it was said to him in vision : « Prepare, for thou wilt be with the fathers in the battle. » And that year he multiplied his prayers and devotions and sleepings upon the ground day and night, and his continuance in prayer and sadness and weeping and copious tears. So when I, the sinner, saw him, I begged and implored him to tell me the cause of his doing thus with himself. Now that holy father hated vain glory, and he said to me : « O my son, my sins are many; and, when I remember them, I weep and repent, and offer prayers to God, praying to him for pardon. » But since I, the sinner, enjoyed some freedom with Abba Moses, because I attended him night and day,

I grasped his feet and kissed them, and my tears ran over them, and I said : « I will not rise nor lift my face until thou shalt make known to me the truth of this matter. » So he answered : « If thou must know, thou also wilt share my lot with me; — for none will be safe in the days of this government; — above all in the harm that the people will do to the Church. But I know that the Lord Christ will not abandon her finally, but that she will be delivered from her trouble. For this government will perish with all its armies, and there will be a new government after it. » Thus I heard much from him of these and other matters. And I know that every word he said was true and is fulfilled in its season; and I continued to meditate on this and what would come after it. And after that day, Marwân and his government were driven out, and he came to Egypt, as has been related. For I was pondering and wondering what would happen to the Church of God in the time of peace and prosperity, and other things; and while he was conversing with me, behold, the father patriarch arrived, escorted by the soldiers, at the door of the holy church in the city of Wasîm, on the morning of Sunday, the 10th of Abîb. When my holy father Moses saw them, he said

I have long desired this, although I confess that I am not worthy to shed my impure blood in return for the pure blood shed for us. But great is the sadness in my heart, because the generation of the saints is scattered, and we are become exceedingly poor, since we cannot find a man to share with us in this ministry, as I bore witness at the time of the synod. » And my father Moses, in spite of his fasting and prayer and virtue, said : « Woe to me, the sinner! I believe that Christ will not forsake me, but will help me. » After this the soldiers began to molest us. Then we received the holy communion from the hand of the glorious father, Abba Michael, the holy patriarch and chosen martyr. Meanwhile we saw flames ascending from Al-Fusṭâṭ; and we were informed that Marwân had set fire to the storehouses of provisions and cotton and straw and to the supplies of barley. So, when the soldiers learnt this, they troubled us much, and cried out upon us with great indignation. And my father Moses laid his arm on mine, and put on an outer garment, and I supported him, and he left all that was in his church, and went out. And there was not one of the bishops or ecclesiastics with the patriarch save me alone and one reader of the church of Saint Macarius, named James, a native of Bilbais.

Now Marwân had commanded that the trumpet should be sounded at Miṣr, and a proclamation made during three days, saying : « If after three days I find man or beast remaining in Miṣr, I will put that man or that beast to death, for I will set fire to the whole city of Al-Fusṭâṭ. » So all the people passed over to Al-Gizah and the Island and other parts, escaping in the boats; even the carefully guarded girls, who had never been out of doors, went away with their families; and the people left all their goods behind. And the caliph caused Miṣr to be set on fire from the south to the north, until it reached the Great Mosque of the Muslims. And a countless number of men and beasts were drowned in the river, because they could find none to carry them across, when they fled from the fire. For brother fled from brother, and friend from friend; and the blind found none to lead him; and the cripple and the paralytic and the sick and the old man about to die and the aged woman unable to move, — all these were burnt in the fire. And people were lying in the streets and lanes and gardens in the district of Al-Gizah like corpses, in consequence of all that they had suffered in their great misery and hunger and thirst. And they found no food on account of the multitude of people; for Marwân had burnt the supplies of provisions in Miṣr.

tharah, and reported our arrival to him; and he commanded a man named Azrak to take charge of us, until he should settle what was to be done. At that time Marwân was informed that his enemies, the Khorassanians, had arrived at Al-Faramâ. So he sent troops in boats to the north to every district, that they might burn all the boats that they found on the river; and this purpose they carried out. And he despatched other troops by land, with orders to burn the cities and villages and vineyards and water-wheels and every thing that they could find. So they marched on till they reached Atrib, which they were minded to burn. And there were there five streams of water running westwards, besides canals flowing from the river called Gehon [1], which is the River Nile. And Marwân thought that he could remain on the western side of the Nile, while the Khorassanians were on the eastern bank, and that, when they found the country laid waste, they would retire, because it was empty of men and beasts and provisions and stores, and that they would not find in the land anything to repay their trouble, nor boats by which they might cross over to him, and so that they would not remain there, but would turn upon their heels. But afterwards he learnt that his enemies were approaching near, and that there were fords in the river by which they might reach him. And when this was made known to him, he sent a messenger to bring back those whom he had despatched to Atrib; and therefore they did not burn that town, because they returned speedily to him. And on the 18th of Abîb, in the year 470 of the Martyrs, Marwân burnt a fort at Miṣr on that night. For he crossed in the boats, he and all his army, and encamped on the bank of the river until he had burnt the fort. But he did not burn the boats which were with him on the western bank. And when the soldiers came to him every day, he said to them : « Take care of the boats. » And wherever he marched he took us about with him, we being in great distress through the multitude of people and beasts, and the crowd and throng.

And at sunset, on the 18th of Abîb, the Khorassanians reached Miṣr, and he beheld them from the western bank; and he commanded his followers to assemble that night. The Khorassanians marched into Miṣr next day, heaping foul insults upon Marwân and his sons. These strangers formed a vast host, and they pitched their tents to the north of Al-Fusṭâṭ, at a place called the Stable; and their camp extended from that spot to the mountains. Thus their vanguard were on the bank of the Nile, while their rearguard reached from Al-Faramâ to Gaza; for these who had arrived at Miṣr were their scouts.

When Marwân encamped for a time during the night of the 20th of Abîb, being then on the march, he ordered that we should be brought before him; for he was filled with anger and wrath against us on account of what Ḥautharah had told him of us. How great were the grief and the anxiety which settled upon us at that hour! When I think upon what took place, I fear and tremble for those who would not weep if they beheld what happened to us, nor grieve for what we underwent. For the words of David the Prophet, in the 37th Psalm, were fulfilled upon us, where he says[1] : « My acquaintances stood far from me. » All the disciples that had been around us fled with the others, and none remained with us save the priest Mennas, archpriest of the church of Saint Sergius, and the hegumen Theodore, who was afterwards counted worthy to be made a bishop, and the deacon who was the patriarch's secretary, because he had been at Miṣr. These had left their wives and children and goods, and followed us, saying : « We will die with you. » So, when the Father Michael saw the goodness of their thoughts, he blessed them, and bade them return and not follow us, but this they would not do; and they continued to march with us. And I was wearing the habit of the monks, although unworthy. And my Father Moses, the bishop, took the father's left arm, and I took his right arm.

And when we arrived at Marwân's tent, the swordsman came out to us, and he was very terrible; and he conducted us within by order of the prince. So when Marwân beheld us, he said : « Which of you is the patriarch? »

When he was told which was he, he commanded that they should bring the patriarch forward before him; and they delivered my father to soldiers who were devourers of men's flesh; but they set us apart on one side. Then the father, Abba Moses, was thrown upon his knees, and they lifted up his feet, and beat him with brazen clubs upon his sides and neck, saying to him : « Give us money, and we will release thee. » But he answered not a word, for he knew not what they said to him, except what I understood of their words, * and repeated to him word by word. And he was prostrate on the ground, thanking God and praying him to make him worthy to suffer for the Church of God. And the officer did not address a single syllable to me, for they considered my dress disgraceful. Now the holy father, Abba Michael, the patriarch, was standing with his face towards Marwân, whose eyes were turned towards Miṣr, where he saw his enemies; while the Khorassanians were looking in his direction, and all the people of Miṣr on the bank of the Nile were insulting Marwân, as we said before. And behold, one of the Khorassanians shot an arrow towards the western bank, while we were looking at him. And those that were left of the Christians at Miṣr said to the Khorassanians : « There is our father, the patriarch, standing before Marwân, the misbeliever; and we know not what he will do with him. » The Bashmurites also had met the Khorassanians at Al-Faramâ and said to them : « Marwân has seized our patriarch, with intent to kill him, because we fought against the prince, and slew his soldiers before you came. » Meanwhile Ḥautharah, the misbeliever, was with Marwân, and was saying to him : « This patriarch said : Be of good courage, for God will take away the government from Marwân, and deliver it to his enemies. » And many words like this were uttered by him. So when Marwân heard these accusations, his interpreter said to the father patriarch : « Art thou the patriarch of Alexandria? » For that was Marwân's question. Abba Michael answered : « Yea, I am thy servant. » And I heard him say this, because I was near him. So Marwân said to him : « Tell me, art thou the chief of the enemies of our religion? » Then the holy patriarch answered and said : « I am not the chief of wicked men, but of good men; and my people do not work evil, but they have been ruined by troubles, so that they have even been forced to offer their children for sale. » After that, I did not hear another word from his mouth. Then Marwân commanded the officials who were holding him to stretch forth their hands to him forthwith, and pull out the hair of his beard from his cheeks; and they cast his hair into the river, and I saw it with my own eyes floating on the water. Now his beard had been full and handsome, flowing over his breast like the beard of Jacob Israel. And the Khorassanians on the eastern bank were observing what Marwân did to the patriarch; and if they had found means of crossing over to Marwân, they would have killed him because of the tyranny and hardness of heart which they saw in him; but they could not find any boats at all in which to cross. The river, however, did not rise at all before the 1st of Miṣri; and the western branch had sunk so low as to be without water; and in the other branch, namely the eastern, there were a few places that could be forded, but the Khorassanians did not know them; and Marwân guarded them because he knew of them; and no boat from the western bank approached Miṣr.

The sixth hour passed that day while the father patriarch was standing before Marwân beardless with bare cheeks. And while my father Moses was all the time undergoing the torments which we have mentioned before, the Lord opened the eyes of his heart, and he beheld the two martyrs, Sergius and Bacchus, with the grace of God surrounding them, in the likeness of two horsemen of the army of the prince; and they crossed the river, riding their horses, while no man saw them but he alone, until they stood opposite to Marwân, and said to him : « Why dost thou sit here paralysed, when thine enemies have crossed over to the west? » But no man beheld those two, except my father, the bishop Abba Moses, and Marwân, and no other. For the father patriarch was still in the hands of the officials, and they were tormenting him. Then the two holy martyrs disappeared.

And Marwân forthwith broke up his camp, and commanded the troops to follow him, ordering that we should be kept till the morrow. Thus we remained the rest of that day on the bank of the river, exposed to the sun, in consequence of the command which the caliph had given to the soldiers, until I thought that my father would not live till sunset, after the severe torment which they had inflicted upon him. Then, on the morrow early, we were visited by bishops, and monks from Wadî Habîb, who had come to see what had been done to us; and subsequently they remained with us. Then Marwân appeared, for he was riding; and he took his seat, and commanded that we should be brought before him early in the morning. So when the sun rose he summoned a swordsman, and sent for our father, Abba Michael, alone, that the officer might bring him into his presence. Accordingly the swordsman took his hand and led him in, saying to us : « Stand here till he calls you ». But my father, Abba Moses, cried out, saying : « As the Lord lives, I will never be separated from my father, but will follow him whithersoever they take him! » Then I also hastened with them, in order to find out what would become of them. But, when the swordsman saw me, he said : « The prince ordered that the patriarch alone should enter. » The bishop said to him : « I have told thee that I cannot

Now he had in his hand a brazen club, which weighed twenty pounds, and he raised it to strike my father upon the head; and he offered his head to him. But when he was about to strike him, a body of his companions, who were in attendance, cried out upon him, and would not let him strike. And all the soldiers said in their language and speech : « Verily what an excellent servant this bishop is to his master! » Then there came a messenger saying : « Bring them all in, for the prince summons them. » So we all entered; and found Marwân sitting on the bank of the river. Then first the blessed father went forward alone, as Marwân ordered; and the prince made him stand before him all that day for about ten hours, confronting him; but the patriarch's heart was with Christ, while his hands were stretched out, and his very limbs seemed to pray; and he made the sign of the cross over his face, without fear of the prince who hated the sign of the cross. And the caliph did not address a single word to him; and there were around him many drawn swords and weapons of war.

As for us, Marwân commanded his men to set us on his left hand in a place apart; and again he ordered that we should be brought forward and delivered to certain soldiers, other than those who had conducted us from Alexandria; so they handed us over to men who were like wild beasts. And he bade one of his companions take charge of us, namely Yazîd, a leader of certain men with him, who was braver than any other of his followers. Our number on that day was ten, besides the father patriarch, Abba Michael; and Yazîd put with each one of us three soldiers, who oppressed us sorely. Then, when the sun was burning, that officer prepared for us various instruments of torture; for they had not agreed as to what kind of death they should make us suffer; upon which I and my father Moses begged the father patriarch to say over us the Prayer of Absolution, according to the canon of the church; and so he did. Afterwards we prayed one for another, and the younger of us said to the elder : « If thou shalt find mercy with Christ, remember me. » And we turned our faces to the East and prayed, while the people were looking at us from the eastern bank, and also on the western side, and many of the Muslims wept for us; and Marwân's eldest son, named Abd Allah, was weeping for us also, together with the people.

Then Marwân lifted up his eyes towards the eastern bank, and saw the Khorassanians in great numbers; and he was dismayed for this and said : « How shall I fight them. » For he knew not what to do. Now Abd ar-Raḥîm, the misbeliever whom we mentioned before, had discovered a mixture with which he smeared the boats, so that fire could not injure them. Therefore Marwân caused the boats to be thus anointed, and embarked on each boat eighty men, and bade them fight the people; so they threw fire over them, and burnt all the boats that they found. But a boat which was approaching the eastern bank, where stood Ṣâliḥ and Abu Aun and their companions, was upset with its occupants, and all were drowned except one man; and the people of Miṣr picked up the corpses, and took what was on them and the ammunition and money that they had. And the living, who were not drowned, they took as prisoners, and bound them together two and two, with iron chains round their necks, and dragged them to land and delivered them to the Khorassanians. Now the Khorassanians had brought many boats with them to Miṣr.

And when the tenth hour of that day had passed, Marwân ordered Yazîd, in whose charge we were, to take us to the north of the Island of An-Nuzahât. So we prayed upon the edge of the river, in the enclosure Then, when they took us away, they hurried us along in great wrath. But the Lord beheld our secret thoughts and our faith, and he put into the heart of Abd Allah, the elder son of Marwân, the wish to intercede with his father, Marwân, weeping with copious tears; for he begged his father to let us go, saying : « Behold, thou seest our enemies surrounding us; while we are preparing, if things go hard with us, to escape to the land of the Blacks, who are, as we have been told, the spiritual children of this old man; so that, if thou slayest him, they will not welcome us, but they also will rise up against us and slay us. » When Marwân had heard these words of his son, we were taken back to prison. Now there were in that place four prisons. So, when they brought us into the prison, they made us fast with wood and iron, and we were in great distress. And the first to be fettered with iron was the holy father and patriarch; and after him the bishop, Abba Moses, and I, his son John, the poor sinner and deacon, upon whom he had laid his holy hand without any merit of mine. Then followed the bishop of Tunbuda, Abba Mennas, the patriarch's secretary, and Abba Zacharias, bishop of Atrib, and his spiritual son, the bishop of Busîr, whose name was Peter, and who had recently taken possession of his see, and the deacon George, the son of the spiritual father who received the see of Al-Basrât, and Athanasius, archpriest of the church of Saint Macarius, and Abba

James, who was also counted worthy of the bishopric of Sanjâr, and his spiritual brother, the son of the Father Peter of Samannûd. And they fastened to the feet of each one of us eleven a mass of iron, exceedingly heavy, weighing half a Khunjûr; and they put us behind three wooden doors without light or air or means of rest, one looking to the east and another to the west; and the narrow space in which we were oppressed us more than the iron, so that we almost died from crowding, and the gaolers were pitiless; for that misbelieving prince, Marwân, had given orders that we should be closely confined. And our father's sadness on our account was greater than his care for himself; but he encouraged us with the word of God and the holy canons of our ancient fathers. So not one of us hid anything from the others, but we were all one soul, as Paul says[1], awaiting the end; and we prayed God to send it quickly, that we might lay down our lives for the people, rather than that one of them should perish. When the father discoursed to us, he spoke a spiritual language like the music of a harp, while the breath of life came forth from his mouth with spiritual praises; and he persevered in fasting and in prayer day and night.

As for my father Moses, in the first hour after they brought us into the prison and put us in fetters he prophesied to us, saying : « They will not slay us this time; yet we shall not be released from the prison as long as Marwân is alive. » And it was as he said. And when we wished to break our fast, a man named Ibn Kusṭus sent to us provisions for breakfast; but we had no room to eat, and could not turn to the right or left on account of the narrow space. And there was a great dearth in the district of Al-Gizah through the multitude of people; for wheat was not to be found at all, nor barley, after a waibah had been sold at a high price; but in spite of the distress salt was sold at the usual rate.

Then Marwân, after these troubles which he had brought upon every place, ordered his followers to slay and take prisoners and pillage; and they obeyed him. And he sent to Upper Egypt, and slew all the Christians there; the leader of that business being a man named Marwân, son of Abd al-Azîz the founder of Ḥulwân. And they laid waste the country from Memphis to the city of Theodosia.

But when the Lord desired to take vengeance upon them, he endured them no longer, after the crimes which they had committed in corrupting and violating women, and polluting many of the virgins. Accordingly there came some men who knew the fords of the river, and made them known to the Khorassanians, whom they guided thither, thus conducting them across to the western bank. And the Khorassanians divided their army

Then Marwân despatched Ḥautharah and his men to take up their position opposite to the Khorassanians, intending to prevent their crossing. But Marwân's boats were seized by the Khorassanians of the black-robed party, who had destroyed the church of the Martyr Apater. Meanwhile we, in spite of all these events, remained in the prison at Al-Gizah, in bonds and in distress with our companions; and all men were hindered from enquiring after us by fear lest we should be put to torture; but, whenever a man desired to come to us to receive the blessing of the fathers, he bribed our gaoler heavily. After that they oppressed us even more cruelly, as they did to Ignatius, the saint and martyr, when they delivered him to the ten lions. So they acted even when our brethren did good to them, for they tormented us yet more. At that time then we remained with the patriarch ten days and ten nights in this fashion; but when the deacon and reader of Bilbais saw our distress he hastened away to the Monastery of Saint Macarius, in Wadî Habîb, and assembled all the holy fathers and monks; and they began to fast and pray in the church night and day, crying to the Lord Christ to look upon us, and to take away our misery and all that men were suffering by captivity and slaughter and pillage, and to put a stop to the lamentations of young and old. So the gracious God heard them, and raised up the Khorassanians to help them : for Abu Aun crossed the river with his army to the western bank; and when Ḥautharah and his troops, Marwân's followers, saw him, they took to flight. And the Khorassanians pursued and fought them, and did not cease slaughtering them until they reached Wadi Habîb, in answer to the prayers of the saints; for the army of the Khorassanians crossed over the river on the day on which the monks assembled in the church, which was Saturday, the last day of Abîb. And they slew so many of Marwân's army, that of eight thousand men whom he led out of Miṣr only four hundred survived and no more.

When Marwân learnt that his enemy's troops had been divided into four parts, he fled two days before they crossed the river, carrying his wives and his goods with him; and thus he escaped secretly. And of the followers of Yazîd three hundred were slain, for he fled from Shaṭnûf in the direction of Mount Wasîm; and then his own men killed him, and killed his horse that he rode, and went over to the other party, and swore allegiance to them.

But the two sons of Marwân were at Al-Gizah when their father fled, and they knew not whither he had gone. For he had sent his younger son to the north of the Island of An-Nuzahât; and he was very wicked like his father. But as for the elder, Abd Allah, our fathers had prayed for him that he might not meet with trials nor troubles because of what he had done for them; and so it was. Now the younger son was fifteen years old; and he fled to An-Nuzahât, accompanied by four hundred horsemen; and he found there a certain oil, called dogs' oil, in marble jars, and he upset it into the river; and after setting fire to An-Nuzahât, he joined his father Marwân. And although he released those that were in the prisons at that place, we were not released, but he wished to burn us in the fire. Then he went into the midst of the boats of the fleet to burn them; and a voice was heard, crying mightily: « Behold, thy enemies are come! » So he and his companions fled quickly. And those who remained at An-Nuzahât of its inhabitants extinguished the fire, and set us free at sunset from the prison, and released us from the irons on our feet. God be witness that some of the Muslims who were on horseback dismounted, and took off the iron from us; and men took women's dresses and put them on, and hid themselves in the storehouses and cellars, through fear of that terrible voice which they had heard. And they took us and led us away to Saint Peter's church at Al-

Gizah, while some of the faithful walked with us, it being the night of the first Sunday in Misri.

Now there was no water at all in the canal of Al-Gizah, for it was dried up by God's command; nor did the water rise or stir at all until the day when we crossed over it on our feet. And when the Khorassanians learnt that their enemy had fled, they embarked in the boats that night and crossed to Al-Gizah, taking their horses also on board. So they pursued Marwân. And every man that they met, who was not wearing the black garments, they put to death. And that night the van of the army, which had crossed with Abu Aun from Shaṭnûf, came southwards with their drawn swords in their hands, and all wearing iron cuirasses, purposing to fight Marwân and to capture him. And as for us, we felt no inclination to sleep that night. For the Khorassanians stayed three days and three nights, joining their forces at the beginning of Misri, and marching onwards; while we beheld them as one host from the mountains to the river. Then Ḥautharah begged for a safe-conduct; but they would not accept him, saying: « If thou wilt not deliver to us the enemy of God, Marwân, thou shalt have no safe-conduct from us. » So he departed and took Marwân, and acted deceitfully with him, saying: « Behold, our enemies have drawn near to us. Arise, let us take our women and children and goods, and let us embark secretly in the boats, and descend the river, and escape to the Romans; for, if we fall into this man's hand, he will destroy us. » Marwân answered: « Ah Ḥautharah, thou art acting treacherously with thy master! » And thereupon Marwân took his sword, and cut off Ḥautharah's head and killed him.

And none opposed the Khorassanians nor stood before them, after Ḥautharah was slain. Then they called upon every man who was a Christian to fasten a cross of gold or silver or copper upon his forehead, or upon his garment, and upon the door of his house, and whoever did not do so was slain; but this was no fault of ours. And the Khorassanians also had crosses of gold and silver on their horse's necks. Then the army of which Ṣâliḥ was leader overtook Marwân and his son, after pursuing him for a whole day, and, when they met, the fighting did not cease between them from evening till morning, so that many were slain. escaped. And the Khorassanians took possession of Ḥulwân and all that was therein, and slew the women, and seized all the money of Egypt that was at Ḥulwân. And the Persians, Marwân's followers, were slain with the sword; and the enemy seized all that belonged to them, and carried it away in the prince's boats.

And now the Nile began to rise, although it had been sinking till the Khorassanians had crossed over to the bank of Al-Gizah, and had destroyed Marwân. After that it increased again, from the first day of Misri, and rose every day about a cubit, till finally it reached eighteen cubits that year, for which reason men said that the hand of God was with the Khorassanians. Whenever the latter found men bearing the sign of the cross, they lightened their taxes, and behaved kindly to them, and did good to them, in whatever part of the country they might be.

But they impaled Marwân head downwards, after they had killed him. For they took him prisoner at a place called Dâwatun, and we were witnesses of this event; and they cut off the head of his vizier. And when those princes, the leaders of the Khorassanians, inquired after us, we went to them; and they set the holy father and martyr, Abba Michael, free, and honoured him greatly. comely than before, by the power of the Lord Christ; and we and all who had witnessed these occurrences glorified God. And the father, Abba Michael said : « Verily I saw a personage while I was in prison, who touched my face with his hand, and my beard grew again handsomer than it had been before. » When the father, Abba Michael, requested of the governor to protect the property of the churches in all the provinces, he complied with his request. And as for the Bashmurites, he made them free of taxation, and gave them other revenues as a gift. Now Marwân had burnt all the books and accounts of the Divâns, so that they did not know the amount of the revenues, whether paid in cash or in kind. In those days great events took place in Egypt; but Ṣâliḥ departed with his army to Palestine.

When we were set free, each one of us departed to his own place. And Abu Aun was made governor of Egypt. And a short time afterwards there came to Egypt two men, officials of the divâns, sent by the prince. They were Muslims, and one of them was named Aṭâ, son of Shuraḥbil, and the other Safî; and they were far from the knowledge of God. And Abu Aun laid before them all the accounts of Egypt, and brought the country back into the state in which it had been under Marwân. Although they were driven away from the palace, the prince sent them back; and they imposed two fresh duties upon Lower Egypt, and one upon Upper Egypt. This was in the second year of security and prosperous government. And they instructed the governor, and taught him how to cause great trouble, through their hatred of us, the Christians, and their love of money; for authority was given to them to do what they would. thousand[1] dinars, apart from the necessary outlay and expenses and what we have already mentioned. And in the third year of the rule of the Khorassanians they doubled the taxes, and exacted them from the Christians, and would not fulfil their promises to them. For the two secretaries aforesaid and the Khorassanians forgot that it was God who had given them the government, and neglected the holy Cross which had gained them the victory. And Abd Allah, the prince, sent letters over the whole of his empire, declaring that every one who would adopt his religion, and pray according to his prayer, should be exempted from the poll-tax. So in consequence of the cruel extortions and burdens imposed upon them, many of the rich and poor denied the faith of Christ, and followed Abd Allah. Then the father patriarch, Abba Michael, went to Abu Aun, the governor, and addressed him with reference to the troubles which had been caused in Egypt, instead of the good administration which he had purposed; and he answered : « The prince gave those orders because wicked men bore witness to him, saying : If the people of Egypt find rest for one year, they will conspire against thee, and make war upon thee, as the Bashmurites made war upon Marwân. » Then Abba Michael prayed the governor to relieve the churches of Alexandria by lightening the taxes on the land which is cultivated for them only; so Abu Aun gave orders to those two secretaries, telling them to do what the patriarch desired; yet they would not obey him, but began to incline his heart to evil. So the father patriarch, and my father, Abba Moses, with him, and I, the mean one, remained for more than a month attending at the palace and interviewing those miscreants. And there was there an old Ishmaelite, who beheld us daily at this business; and he feared God. And he related a story to our father, Abba Michael, saying : « As we, the Muslims who serve God, have grown poor, so I know that you also will be like us. » The father said to him : « Thou speakest truly; but I desire a fuller explanation of the meaning of thy speech. » So the old man replied :

« In my youth, my parents entrusted me to two friends, Ishmaelite merchants, that I might carry goods with them to Africa, to sell them there.

When we had journeyed as far as the Five Cities, with our camels laden with the rarities of Egypt and the East, we halted by a lake that was very deep. And each one of us had tied to his belt a purse, containing four hundred dinars. And in consequence of the fatigue of the journey and the heat, one of us stripped off his clothes, that he might go down into the water and bathe. So he threw his belt to his comrade, that he might keep it until he came up from the water; but it slipped from his friend's hand into the water unnoticed by anyone else. The man who had dropped it stripped himself, and went down to seek it, but could not find it. So when he came up again, he gave his comrade his own girdle, instead of that which was lost, without telling him that it was lost. And we journeyed onward into Africa, where we sold our merchandise, and bought other wares suitable for Egypt. Then the elder of my companions said to the younger : Give me the four hundred dinars which thou hast, that I may buy merchandise with them. But he answered : What we have bought is enough for us this * P. 182 time. And though the other insisted, he did not tell him what had happened. So the other bought certain goods with the four hundred dinars which he had. When we returned to the lake, the same thing happened as before; for the elder, to whom the lost money belonged, stripped himself and went down to bathe. And he found his belt, which had been lost; and when he looked at it, he recognised it as his own. So he said to his friend :

Tell me what thou hast done. Then his friend made known to him what had happened, and how he had dropped the girdle. But the other did not tell him that he had found it, until they arrived at Miṣr, and sold their wares. Then the elder gave to the younger the interest of the four hundred dinars as well as the principal, saying to him : God gives thee this money of thine, and thou must also have the interest of it. When he had done this, his comrade discussed with him what had taken place between them; and the thing became known to the governor, and all men marvelled thereat. And both of them took some of their money, and gave it as alms to the poor; and after that they devoted themselves entirely to religion, and I imitated them; and not one of us either sells or buys any more. But at the present day, O holy man, behold, thou seest how all men love injustice, and have set evil as a crown upon their heads; and thou art a witness to this, and knowest that it is true. »

When he had related this tale to us, we departed to our own places. And God did not endure the Khorassanians, but raised up wars against them from every side. reign; and in the year 470 of the Martyrs he marched from Egypt at the beginning of the month of Abîb. Yet his army did not dare to enter Africa, but remained in the desert, where most of them perished with thirst. And in that year God destroyed Abd Allah, and his son sat upon the throne instead of him. And great fighting took place in Egypt between Ṣâliḥ and his brother, who now began to govern. Then the prince sent Ṣâliḥ into Egypt to seek his troops, and rescue them from the hand of his brother. Then he brought back the army which he had sent into Africa, and entered Miṣr on the 19th of Babah. And he marched to Palestine, that they might fight Ṣâliḥ's brother. And Abu Aun was there also; and many of his soldiers were killed. And the war continued between them without interruption, for God requited them for the evil which they had done in the land of Egypt; and they destroyed one another without the interference of a stranger, and did not cease fighting until Ṣâliḥ went away to the sovereign prince in Al-Irak, and Abu Aun returned to Egypt, and Ṣâliḥ's brother fled, and did not appear again, after they had destroyed the troops between them.

At that time Abba John, patriarch of Antioch, went to his rest, after he had continued in reconciliation with the bishops for three years. And God hindered the water from rising while Abu Aun was in Egypt; for its

The bishops had come from their sees to the patriarch, that they might meet together in his presence at the Feast of the Cross, according to their custom of assembling before him and forming a synod twice in the year. So the bishop of Miṣr and the others went to him. Now God had revealed this matter to my father the bishop, Abba Moses. And orders were given that none should go that year to Alexandria for the synod according to custom. So the bishops assembled at Miṣr before the patriarch. And on the 17th of Tut, the day of the Feast of the glorious Cross, the clergy of Al-Gizah and An-Nuzahât assembled with most of the people of Al-Fusṭâṭ, and the old and the young of the laity: and they bore the gospels, and censers with incense. around. And the patriarch lifted up the cross; while beside him stood Abba Mennas, bishop of Memphis, bearing the holy gospel. And he led us all forth, carrying crosses and books of the gospels; and we stopped upon the bank of the river, it being before sunrise. And the father patriarch prayed, and Abba Mennas, the bishop, prayed; and the people did not cease to cry Kyrie eleison until the third hour of the day, so that multitudes of the Jews and Muslims and others marvelled at our cries to God, the Glorious and Exalted. And he heard us, praised is his glorious name! For the river rose and increased by one cubit; and all glorified and gave thanks to God. And when the news reached Abu Aun, he marvelled and feared, he and all his troops. And by God's inspiration he said to his soldiers and to the people of Miṣr : « We desire to know which of the religions is the true one ». So he gave orders that the Muslims dwelling at Miṣr should assemble, and go forth to the mountain to the east of Miṣr. Therefore they gathered together, small and great, old and young, slaves and freemen; and not one of the people of his faith and religion was left; and the multitude were assembling from midnight till the fourth hour of the day. And they prayed and offered supplications to God, saying thus : « O God, the Only One, who hast no fellow, O Creator of heaven and earth, thou knowest that we associate no other with thee, and worship none besides thee, and that we say not, as the Christians do, that thou hast a Son, or that thou wast

We desire this day to see thy wonders, which thou dost work, that we may know and prove that there is no religion like ours, which we inherit from our fathers; and we pray thee to work a miracle for us, as thou didst yesterday for the Christians, who are our enemies and the enemies of our creed, for they set beside thee another God, begotten by thee from the beginning, whom they call Christ born of Mary, saying that he is thy Son, with the Holy Ghost, and that thou art the Third of them, with many such doctrines. Then Abu Aun ordered that the people of Misr should be tried, and bad the crier proclaim that the Muslims were to go out to the mountain to pray. And on the morrow they all issued forth. And the Jews and the Samaritans went out the second day; but the water neither rose nor sank, but remained as it was. So Abu Aun, the governor, remained in sadness and without faith. But he said : « So that I may see the end of the matter »; and he remained in perplexity, saying : « By the prayers of the Christians the water rose, and at our prayers it sank. » Then he ordered on the third day that no one at all should go out, and that none should ascend to the mountain nor pray. And the water did not rise during the three days at all. After that he gave orders to bring the Christians who were at Al-Fusṭâṭ, and certain tribes whose names we do not remember; and he commanded Abba Moses to pray, him and his people. So they recited the prayers, and gave thanks to God till the sixth hour of the day, and went down and walked round Miṣr, and came to the bank of the river, and prayed for the rest of the day. And that night the river rose three cubits, so that altogether it completed seventeen cubits. Then all the people rejoiced greatly, and thanked God and glorified his name.

And as for Abu Aun, for this reason he increased his benefits towards the Christians and their churches, and lightened their taxes. And from that day the Father Patriarch and the bishops, with those who were baptized and the whole Church, lived in security and peace, in great joy and gladness, in the land of Egypt and the Five Cities and all the places under the see of the evangelist, Saint Mark, because of the miracles of the Church which the governor beheld, and her mighty works. gels; for one cured diseases, and another showed forth wonders, and another expounded the scriptures and taught and exhorted, and another exercised his body in works and labours; and all the laity were filled with admiration of them, and sought their blessing. And the father, Abba Michael, for this cause was happy in his bishops and all his flock, and used to go round among them, and enquire into all their circumstances with care, and exhort them with his life-giving words, like the apostles and fathers at the beginning, and like the dwellers in the deserts and caves, encouraging them and teaching them how to fight the Satanic spirits. And to the monks of the monasteries he taught humility and mutual love; and the faithful laity he led to that which God approves, and to those of little faith he taught the doctrines of the gospel, and those who were engaged in disputes he conciliated together, and calmed their malice, and appeased their enmity by his instructions in the Holy Scriptures.

So he raised his hands to heaven, and said : « If these are they who have denied thee and done evil deeds, show forth a sign speedily without delay, so that all may see them, and glorify thy name. » Accordingly, after a short time, the Lord destroyed them, and caused them to disappear, as he destroyed Sodom. of his foul deeds will find an account of them in the epistle of Athanasius the Apostolic, which he wrote concerning them, and then he will understand and know that matter. And when Abba Moses was first ordained there were many monasteries in his diocese of Wasîm, belonging to those followers of Meletius, in which they dwelt. So he banished them all. But some of them had received the habit from his hand, when they put it on, and became united to us; and for this reason there was friendship between me and them, during the time when I was a layman. So when they stripped off them the spiritual habit, received from my father's hand, there was no longer any affection between me and any of them. And I questioned him about their former deeds, when he was calling them sorcerers and the children of Satan; and he answered me : « I will tell thee of another thing done by those men, who were not worthy to enter among the people of God nor into his kingdom, namely, that they bewitched children, and led them out into the desert, and bound them where none could see them, and sat down near them to guard them; and if they complained of thirst, they gave them nothing to drink; and when their thirst became severe, they poured water over their heads and bodies; and when one of them was near death, and his eyes started out of his head, and his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth, they cut off his head with a knife before he died, so that Satan might speak through those heads without falsehood, and they might

Now there was a holy priest in our company, living in the Cell at Wasîm; and on Friday, during the Fast, while I was with him in the Cell, but Abba Moses was seeing no man, since he was employing himself in prayer and self-discipline, except on Saturdays and Sundays, then that priest saw a great dragon in his cell. Therefore he made a cross of silver, and placed it on the spot where he *P.186

And there was in those days a great dearth, and so a man came to An-Nuzahât to ask alms, and stole something thence. And another man saw him, who was a believer; and he wished to reprimand him, so that he might repent of the theft, but was prevented from doing so by his kindness and charitable thoughts. Afterwards that man went again, and stole some corn from his neighbours, and buried it, that he might take and eat it. Then the owner of the corn visited my father Moses, who read to him from the Scriptures, and charged him not to reward evil with evil, but to recompense evil with good. Accordingly he did so, and followed his advice, and therefore God increased his wealth until all who knew him marvelled at him.

I have mentioned to you, my brethren, the fate of the accursed people of Palestine, that you might hold yourselves aloof from them. Now I desire to relate another miracle, shown forth by the Father Epimachus, the bishop. One day he was teaching his people in the city of Al-Faramâ, and exhorting them to avoid heretics, and never to associate with them in anything. And behold, a priest of the Chalcedonians appeared before him to tempt him with guile; and the bishop delivered a long discourse, at the end of which the priest said to him : « I believe in thy creed and confess it. » But the bishop Epimachus took holy oil from the body of the holy Severus, the patriarch, and anointed the face of the heretical priest, saying to him : « If thou mockest the Lord, let his power appear in thee! » And immediately a spirit of an unclean devil leapt upon him, and threw him down, and choked and tormented him, so that he foamed at the mouth; and it did not cease to possess and torment him till the day of his death.

Then the bishop gave orders that his flock should never have a stranger as sponsor, but only members of their own family or their parents. And there were there some heretics, who would not obey him; but God requited them speedily, so that every one marvelled at the doctrines of the Lord. And there was a wealthy woman, who took a man who had committed sin with her, and made him godfather to her child. When they returned to their town, while they were on the way, they came to a desert place, and sinful desires were stirred in them according to their custom; so they laid down the child with the garments of baptism upon him, and entered an inn by the way side, and committed their sin; and so the house fell down upon them, and they were killed. And the bishop testified to us that he had beheld those two still together, when the stones were removed from them, and their heads were as they had been, the face of the man and the face of the woman. And many people saw them, and feared. And the news was spread abroad among all men, and the people published it. So the bishop's theology was confirmed among our fathers, and from that day they forbad all men to take a stranger as sponsor, but only their own kinsfolk. And none after that took a stranger as sponsor. But I in my youth saw many commit sin with their sponsors, * during my own lifetime, in consequence of which *P. 187

Now the bishop, Abba John, bishop of Sarsanâ, used to cast out unclean spirits through the grace given to him for his virginity and asceticism. For he remained monk and bishop all his life, and died in a good old age. So also Abba Cyrus, bishop of Ṭânah, to whom during his monastic life a wonder was manifested, namely that a heretic deceived him on account of the faith, and took his hand to lead him into the Fire-Temple, but could not induce him, and he escaped from his hand. Then the bishop took his mantle, he being a monk, and threw it into the fire, and it was not burnt.

Now I know that I have made my discourse long, but my only object has been to teach you what took place, that you may understand it. And as for what is said about the deeds of Abba Zacharias, bishop of Atrib, he dwelt from his youth up in the desert, continuing in prayer; and his tears flowed like streams of water, and weeping was sweet to him; and he was assiduons in alms-giving to the anchorites, and everyone loved him; and his spiritual sons walked in his path. So likewise the blessed Stephen, bishop of Shuṭb, and his fathers who were before him over that see, who were excellent in their lives above the rest of the bishops of Egypt, among whom was the bishop Abba Hesychius, the great Theomantis and confessor, who spoke of divine matters. And to Stephen, who walked in his path, God granted the gift of healing the sick, and knowing what was to happen before it took place; and he showed forth many wonders. Now there was in his diocese a priest, whose wife was pregnant when he died; and she was a pure woman. Yet after his death, her elder sons cast her out, saying that she had conceived by another. But the bishop said to them : « Leave her alone until she brings forth. » So when she was delivered, he took the babe and baptized it, and carried it on his shoulder in the presence of all the people of his diocese, and bade the babe speak before the people, and say who was its father. And immediately it spoke with its tongue, as if it

And my brothers wished to cast my mother out wrongfully. » Then the bishop made the sign of the cross over its lips, and bade it speak no more, until the proper age of speech. And so it was. Like these was the aged Abba Paul, bishop of Akhmîm, who had been the second superior of the Monastery of Sinuthius, the saint, the star of the desert. There was a magician, who took a maiden, and turned her into an ass by his wicked arts, in the presence of all who saw her. And she remained with him three years, as she related. And when he took her out into the desert, he made her a woman, that she might serve him, and he might commit sin with her. But when he entered the city, he rode upon her, as if she were an ass. Then on the 7th of Abîb, the feast of the holy Sinuthius, the excellent prophet, the aged Abba Paul met that man, when she was with him, and took her from him, though none knew of her except the accursed misbelieving magician. And Abba Paul took the magician, and gave him up to the governor, who caused him to be burnt in the fire, after he had been put to death. Then the bishop loosed the woman from the bonds of Satan, and delivered her to the superior of the convent of nuns. For there were among them many women of the laity, living with them.

These then are the fathers whom we saw, and whose words we listened to, and whose glorious deeds cannot be counted. And one of them, Abba Cyrus, who was of Jaujar which is the chief of four sees, had been married in his youth, and lived long with his wife in great devotion and reached the age of a hundred and five years. And those two were two pure virgins, sleeping on one bed for a long time; and their food was barley bread and salt; and all that they had or found they gave in alms to the poor. Then, when they advanced in years, Abba Cyrus gave up his pure wife to the convent of nuns. Another of them was the Father Abba Isaac, bishop over the see of Samannûd, and we know what he endured of torments and fighting with the Barsanuphians, until he brought them back to the faith in the see of Saint Mark the Evangelist.

Now the church of Antioch was widowed and without a patriarch. And a man named Abd Allah Abu Ja'far, who belonged to the family of the first princes, was now reigning, and Abu Muslim was called his uncle. And Abu Aun was in Egypt, and Ṣâliḥ with Abd Allah. And the Church was prosperous and at peace in the days of the holy patriarch, Abba Michael, in consequence of the troubles and struggles which he had endured, and some of which we have related, until was ended his ministry and he went to his rest, and departed in peace to the merciful Lord Christ, as we have described at the end of this history. And the church of Antioch remained without a patriarch after the decease of Abba John, on account of the wars and the armies, until the Khorassanians took possession of the land. At the beginning of their rule, Isaac, bishop of Ḥarran, went to Abd Allah, and petitioned him concerning the patriarchate of Antioch; for Abba John had died, as his two sons informed us, when they came to visit us. They said that Abd Allah was a native of Ḥarran, and his wife was barren; and she saw in a dream one who prophesied to her : « Seek Isaac, the bishop, that he may pray for thee, and the Lord will give thee a son. » And this woman served and feared God; and when Abd Allah solicited her to marry him, she made a condition with him that he should marry no other wife besides her, and should take no concubine. For she said to him : « We know that God created us in the beginning male and female, and, if thou wilt not make this compact with me, I will not marry thee. » So he made the agreement with her, and kept it till the day of her death. Therefore they summoned the bishop Abba Isaac to her, on the morning of the next day, and she made known to him what she had seen in her dream. So he appointed a week between her and him, and prayed God to fulfil her request. Then he departed to the monastery in which he had been a monk, and informed the brethren of the matter; so they assembled in the church before the body of the founder of the monastery, and prayed him to intercede with God on her account. And three days afterwards, while they were fasting, the woman saw two men standing near her bed, who resembled Abba Isaac the bishop and the Father of the monastery, saying to her : « Verily God has heard the prayers, and this night thou

*P. 189 shalt conceive a male child. » Then they disappeared. So she told this dream to her husband, and they were exceedingly glad. Then she conceived and brought forth a son. And for this reason they loved the bishop Abba Isaac, until God gave the government of the empire to Abd Allah, and then the prince gave Isaac authority to be patriarch of Antioch and the East, and commanded that whoever should oppose him should be slain with the sword. Afterwards indeed the prince slew two great metropolitans of this country, because they said to Abba Isaac : « Thou art bishop of Ḥarran. How canst thou break the canons, and accept the support of the government, in taking the patriarchal throne by violence. Thou forcest us to excommunicate thee, for the canons decree that all who take advantage of the government shall be excommunicated. » Abba Isaac therefore laid a complaint before the prince, who gave orders that those two metropolitans should be slain; and there was great trouble in that country. Then Abba Isaac received a decree from the prince for Abu Aun, governor of Egypt, in which he said; « Obey all that the patriarch, Abba Isaac, writes to thee, and do it for him ». Isaac also wrote a synodical letter in his own name to the blessed Abba Michael, patriarch of the city of Alexandria, and sent it, accompanied by gifts, by two sons of his, a priest and a deacon, who were his scribes, and two of the chiefs of the metropolitans, one of them being metropolitan of Damascus, and the other metropolitan of Emesa, that they might receive an answer for him. Therein he wrote salutations to the patriarch of Egypt and his bishops, requesting him to exalt his name among them according to custom and for the sake of unity. He also wrote a letter from himself to Abu Aun, the governor, asking that, if the patriarch refused to comply, he might be sent to Abd Allah, the prince. When the letters reached Abu Aun, he sent to Alexandria and summoned Abba Michael, the patriarch, to Misr by himself; and when the letters and the decree were read to him, he answered, saying : « Do not force me to this, until I have assembled the bishops, and they have taken counsel upon this matter, according to our canons and laws ». Then the governor conceded this to him, and allowed him a delay; and the patriarch took up his residence at Misr, and wrote to the bishops of the north and south and of the farther and nearer parts of Upper Egypt, bidding them all assemble to him, and look into this affair, and write him an answer. When they arrived, they answered, saying to the patriarch : « He is thy equal, Father, and thy partner in the ministry; therefore do what seems good to thee with him; for, as for us, we have nothing to do with this matter. » And there was great trouble among them. And there was with him Abba Theodore, the second bishop of Miṣr of that name, who had been hegumen of Al-Fusṭâṭ, and priest of the church of Saint Sergius : he and my father Abba Moses, bishop of Wasîm, alone. So they sent to me, the sinner, because they knew that I was one of their members, as it is written [1], not by my knowledge, but by spiritual love. So I went to them as a son, after a month, while they were holding converse with the envoys, in order to seek for answers, and for the sake of the decree of confirmation, that is say, the systatic letter. Now these envoys from the east were men in whom were found religion and charity. So when they saw me, I was wearing the habit of monks, though my conduct was far from that which a monk's ought to be, and they pointed to

And the metropolitans said : « His tongue is like a sword, and cannot be opposed. » Then my fathers said to them : « He is in the position of a bishop. » So they marvelled. Then one of the metropolitans said to me : « How many children hast thou in thy diocese and province? » I answered : « I have ten villages in each of which are ten adults, so that they produce every year about fifty human beings. » Then they said : « In truth we see thee worn and weak in body. » And one of them said : « I have under my see nine hundred hamlets, besides cities and villages and small dioceses; and our provinces are few. » And much discourse passed between us; for they were men imbued with religion and charity.

And in the second month they assembled in the church of our Lady, and the affair was settled with the patriarch, Abba Michael, who said : « Sword or fire or casting to lions or exile or captivity, — these are things that trouble me not; but I will not enter into what is not lawful, nor incur my own excommunication, which I subscribed with my own hand and initiated, to the effect that no bishop shall become patriarch. For the excellent fathers excommunicated him who shall take a degree in the hierarchy by the help or favour of the government, and the bishops wrote to me from Antioch, in the time of Abba John, the patriarch, that any bishop who should be established on the throne after him should be excommunicated, and I subscribed my name to that declaration in my own handwriting. How then is it lawful for me to excommunicate myself, and to declare lawful to day what I anathematized yesterday, and to approve to-day what I condemned yesterday, and the holy fathers condemned before me? » Then he broke off the discussion. So they proceeded to Abu Aun, the governor, and said to him : « Wilt thou send the patriarch with us to our own country, as the prince commanded? » But Abu Aun did not wish to send the father, because he loved him and the Christians; and he had found favour before God through them, and through God's acceptance of their prayers for him. So he said to the patriarch : « Thou art advanced in years, and the way is very long. Therefore depart and take counsel with thyself for a few days; and if the matter appears easier to thee, well and good; but if not, thou mayest go or not as thou wilt. »

So we went out from his presence. Then the metropolitans and envoys troubled us, and discoursed with the patriarch concerning the accomplishment of the command to journey with them, and would not leave us. So the father patriarch took thought for the journey, being sad at heart, and saying to my father Moses : « Wilt thou accompany me on this difficult road? » So my father Moses prepared to travel with him, besides Abba Theodore, bishop of Misr; and so also did I, John, the sinner. But when we were ready to start, the news that night arrived at Misr that Isaac, the bishop, who had usurped the throne of Antioch by the help of the government, had died at Antioch, and the see had been occupied by a man named Athanasius, who took his seat that very day before sunset, but died himself also the third day, and both were buried. When the metropolitans

Now I will tell you what was told us concerning this Athanasius. He was one of the chief bishops and a metropolitan, and exercised jurisdiction from the boundary of Ḥarran inwards; and his province was very extensive, so that he used to travel over mountains and rocks and sharp stones on foot, wearing iron sandals, that he might go round every district. And they told us that he was very strong, tall in stature, stout in body; and the privilege had been granted him in synod to ordain the bishops, on account of the distance of the province from Antioch. But as soon as he usurped the patriarchal throne, he died.

And there came to us a Chalcedonian, named George, who was a good man; and he entered with us into the orthodox faith. So the choice of the synod fell upon him, and they made him patriarch of Antioch. But, a little time after he had established himself there, he was attacked by a bishop, named Abba David, whose mother had been nurse to Abu Ja'far al-Manṣûr, prince of the Muslims. This bishop accused him of that which may not be mentioned in the history of the Church; for our misdeeds and sins require no addition to them. After this the prince arrested this George, and fettered him with iron and wood, and put him in prison in the eighth year of his reign. And from that time to now no synodical letter has reached us, and no such letter has gone from us.

Now I will tell you the strange story of the patriarch of Constantinople, and the prince, and a Chalcedonian, in the year 480 of the Martyrs. There was a man of high rank at Constantinople, named Philip, whom the patriarch persuaded to attack the prince, saying : « If thou fightest against him, thou wilt conquer him, and take possession of the government. » But when the news reached the prince, he banished that patriarch to a distant town, where he was cast into a narrow dungeon; and another was made patriarch. Now this prince committed deeds not fit to be named, and removed the pictures from the churches. And I have related this to you, only that you may know that these things were general, and did not take place at Antioch alone, but throughout the empire. Thus the two patriarchs of Constantinople and Antioch were imprisoned at the same time.

Now we have related a little of the good fight fought by the Father Patriarch, Abba Michael. And there was none who remained with him in his distress and weakness to assist him, except the father and bishop, Abba Theodore, bishop of Misr, and Abba Moses, bishop of Wasîm. And when he was advanced in age, he prayed God mercifully to remove him

AVERTISSEMENT

Le texte arabe nous a été adressé sans traduction par Mgr Scher en 1906. Pendant que M. Périer dirigeait l'édition du premier fascicule (Patrol. Or., t. IV, fasc. 3, p. 211-313; cf. page 218, note des éditeurs), M. l'abbé Pierre Dib, prêtre Maronite, traduisait le second. Les noms propres, si souvent défigurés dans les textes arabes, lui ont donné beaucoup de travail, surtout lorsqu'ils sortaient du cycle de ses études antérieures. Il a pu, grâce aux qualités de travail et de patientes recherches qu'il a toujours montrées, les identifier, et il nous a adressé sa traduction en mai 1908. Le Rév. Père D. Ramia, qui possède le français aussi bien que sa langue maternelle et nous tient au courant des faits de l'Orient par les nombreux articles qu'il publie dans nos périodiques, a relu sa traduction au point de vue du français. Nous avons ajouté quelques identifications ou renvois aux textes parallèles que nous avions sous la main en faisant suivre les notes des lettres S, D, N, suivant qu'elles étaient dues à Mgr Scher, à M. P. Dib, ou à nous-même. Enfin, Mgr Scher, durant son voyage en Occident, a dirigé l'impression du présent travail et rédigé les tables.

Les faits contenus dans ce fascicule sont déjà, pour la plupart, connus par ailleurs, mais peuvent du moins servir à l'étude des sources, car l'auteur a le mérite de résumer les auteurs différents ou même contradictoires sans chercher avec leur aide à donner une rédaction nouvelle ; par exemple, après l'histoire de Julien l'Apostat (chap. xxxiii) on trouve au chap. xxxiv : « Une autre version de l'histoire de Julien le maudit » et, dans ce même chapitre, après un paragraphe qui se trouve déjà dans Théodoret, on trouve encore : « d'auteurs expliquent ainsi la cause de son impiété » ; vient alors un résumé du roman de Julien l'Apostat édité par M. Hoffmann.

Il semble du moins que le présent ouvrage est la source médiate ou immédiate de l'ouvrage d''Amr et Sliba : De patriarchis Nestorianorum commentaria édité et traduit par Gismondi, Rome, 1896 et 1897. Car notre auteur rapporte par exemple les histoires d'Isaac, 14me patriarche (ch. LXVI); de Jean Chrysostome (ch. LXVII), de Jahbalaha (ch. LXVIII), d'Aḥaï, 15me patriarche (ch. LXIX), de Théodose le Jeune (LXX), tandis que 'Amr et Sliba rapportent l'histoire d'Isaac (traduction latine, p. 12-15) et ajoutent : « à son époque florissaient Jean Chrysostome et Jaballaha du monastère de Mar 'Abda le thaumaturge », puis l'histoire d'Aḥaï (p. 15) et ajoutent : « à son époque régnait Théodose le Jeune chez les Romains ». Il semble donc qu'ils ont pris dans notre auteur les notices consacrées aux catholicos (les faits sont en effet les mêmes des deux côtés) et qu'ils ont résumé en deux lignes les chapitres intermédiaires qui ne rentraient pas dans leur sujet. Le présent ouvrage serait donc aussi la source immédiate ou médiate des notices consacrées par Bar Hébraeus à l'Église nestorienne dans sa Chronique ecclésiastique.

Un bon nombre de chapitres sont résumés des Actes des martyrs et des saints qui constituaient comme un ménologe oriental; la plupart ont été édités par le R. P. Bedjan comme on le verra par nos renvois, un chapitre même (chap. LXIV) provient des Apophthegmata Patrum.

Nous remercions M. Robert Griveau, archiviste paléographe, qui a bien voulu relire la dernière épreuve de ce travail.

* XXXI. — Histoire de Barba'šemin, le martyr et le onzième des Catholicos[1]. * A p. 64

Le nom de Barba'šemin signifie : l'homme aux quatre noms[2]. Ce père était célèbre par sa pureté, sa sainteté, sa piété et sa chasteté. Il était le neveu de Siméon Barṣabba'ē, de Beit-Garmaï. Il imita son oncle en marchant sur ses traces. Redoutant Sapor le maudit, les Pères l'ordonnèrent en secret dans la maison d'un chrétien.

Il consacrait les évêques et les prêtres et les envoyait secrètement dans différentes régions; il leur recommandait de se déguiser en laïcs pour se cacher. Il vécut ainsi sept ans durant : Quel calice d'amertume pour lui, quand il voyait les chrétiens si maltraités et si persécutés.

Si l'on s'acharnait à tuer les évêques et les prêtres, c'était dans le dessein de priver les chrétiens de ceux qui raffermissaient leur foi et de les conduire اذا أبادهم لم يبق للنصارى من يقوّى اماناتهم فتدعوهم الضرورة الى التمجس. ولما طالت مدّة ملك سابور ودامت المكاره على المومنين واتصل استارهم[1] اجتمع اهل كور كثيرة لا يحصى عددهم الا الله كانوا يرجون حلول نعمة الله عليهم بثقة على سابور فيظهروا فأضجرهم الاختفاء فظهروا ضاجين باصوات تتصدّع لها الصخور من شدّتها قائلين. لو قطعتنا اربًا اربًا لم نسجد للشمس ولم نعبد النار. فانفذ ما بدا لك فينا. ويحكى انّه قتل فى دفعتين مائتا الف ونيّف وثلثين الفًا واستشهد ايضًا مر ميلاس وجماعة من الروساء على يده.

ainsi fatalement à embrasser la religion des mages. Comme le règne de Sapor se prolongeait, que la persécution sévissait toujours contre les chrétiens, et qu'ils avaient vécu continuellement cachés, les fidèles de beaucoup de pays, en si grand nombre que Dieu seul pouvait les compter, se réunirent, espérant avec confiance que l'appui de Dieu descendrait sur eux contre Sapor, en sorte qu'ils pourraient enfin se montrer.

Alors, las de vivre ainsi, ils sortirent de leurs cachettes en poussant des cris formidables à fendre les rochers. Ils disaient : « Quand bien même tu nous hacherais en morceaux, jamais, jamais nous n'adorerons le soleil ni le feu; fais donc de nous ce qui te plaira. »

On raconte qu'à deux reprises on fit trancher la tête à plus de 230.000[1] personnes. Parmi ces martyrs se trouvait Mar Milès (Milâs)[2] avec d'autres chefs chrétiens.

Sapor eut vent de la situation de Barba'šemin. Il le fit appréhender et comparaître devant lui avec seize autres prêtres et diacres; il lui dit alors :
* A p. 65 « N'ai-je point ordonné l'extermination des chefs chrétiens? * Pourquoi m'as-tu désobéi? Pourquoi es-tu devenu leur chef? » — « Le pouvoir de gouverner, lui répondit Barba'šemin, ne cessera jamais de s'exercer chez les chrétiens; et cela jusqu'à la consommation du monde. »

On le jeta alors en prison avec ses compagnons. On les chargea de fers pendant onze mois[3] jusqu'à ce qu'ils fussent devenus noirs et entièrement desséchés de faim et de soif.

Puis Sapor lui envoya une coupe d'or contenant 1.000 drachmes et lui fit dire : « Reçois ces présents que je t'offre; je te mettrai en liberté et te ferai chef des tiens, si tu adores le soleil. » Mais le bienheureux Barbaʿšemin répondit à l'envoyé du roi : « Dis-lui : croit-il me tromper comme on trompe des enfants? Croit-il me faire renier mon Maître et me faire accepter de l'or en échange? » Sapor lui dit : « Si tu n'acceptes pas l'honneur que je t'offre, j'écrirai à tous les sujets de mon empire d'exterminer les chrétiens. » Barbaʿšemin lui repartit : « Plus tu massacreras les chrétiens, plus ils se multiplieront. » Alors le roi ordonna de l'exécuter à l'endroit où avaient été exécutés Siméon (Scheʿmoun) et Šahdost. On lui trancha la tête, alors qu'il montrait un visage joyeux, alors qu'il avait le sourire sur les lèvres, qu'il priait pour ses ouailles et qu'il les bénissait. Treize autres personnes subirent le martyre avec lui. Pour le voir, les chrétiens s'assemblèrent en si grand nombre qu'ils se foulaient presque les uns les autres. Les mages dirent alors : « La parole de Barbaʿšemin : plus on tue des chrétiens, plus ils se multiplient, se vérifie à la lettre. »

L'évêque de la Susiane (Al-Ahwaz) prit le corps du vertueux catholicos et l'enterra à côté de celui de l'archevêque de Gundišabur. Les fidèles prirent les autres corps et les ensevelirent. Que leurs prières à tous [soient avec] les fidèles! Sapor écrivit alors à ses sujets d'empêcher les chrétiens de s'élire un chef et un catholicos afin de démentir la parole de Barbaʿšemin : « le pouvoir de gouverner ne saurait être enlevé aux chrétiens ». Mais ce misérable, cet ignorant ne se doutait certes pas que, s'il voulait détruire ce pouvoir dans son royaume, il persisterait toujours ailleurs.

L'Église demeura sans catholicos de l'an 39 de son règne jusqu'à la première année du règne de Bahrām (Wahrawan), surnommé Farmanšah, soit 33 ans[1].

Le pontificat de Barba'šemin avait duré douze ans[2]. On arrêta, de son temps, les trois pères que Šahdost avait ordonnés. Ils furent jetés en prison pendant quelque temps et on les fit souffrir. Puis, à l'époque de Barba'šemin, ils en furent délivrés avec l'aide de Dieu. Ils prirent la fuite et allèrent habiter des cavernes. Depuis lors, on n'eut aucune nouvelle d'eux. Mais dans la région qu'ils habitaient, ils s'appliquèrent à christianiser un nombre considérable de païens; ils y brisèrent une idole que la foule adorait; et ils moururent dans leurs retraites. On y construisit plus tard, sous leur vocable, un grand monastère et une école où se réunirent des maîtres et des élèves. Du temps de Mar Narsès[3], on agrandit encore ces constructions.

1. Après la mort de Barba'šemin, le siège de Séleucie demeura vacant pendant vingt ans environ (cf. les Actes de ce martyr, publiés par E. Assémani, Acta SS. Martyr., et Bedjan, Acta Mart. et Sanct., II, 303). Mais 'Amr, Élie de Nisibe et Barhébraeus ont des récits différents sur la vacance de ce siège. D — 2. Il avait plutôt duré quatre ou cinq ans, car Šahdost fut martyrisé en 343 et Barba'šemin en 347. Bedjan, Acta Mart. et Sanct., II, 296-303. S. — 3. Le catholicos. S.

XXXII. — Histoire de Qardagh, le martyr[1].

Qardagh vivait au temps de Barbaʿšemin. Il était compté parmi les grands personnages de la Perse. Il était célèbre par sa bravoure. Voyant son âme virile, son courage et son habileté à tirer de l'arc, Sapor l'investit de la dignité de gouverneur du pays qui s'étend de Beit-Garmaï jusqu'à Nisibe. * Il fixa sa résidence à Arbel. Les chrétiens le craignaient beaucoup. Il se construisit un château fort sur une colline élevée[2] et l'appela de son nom. Il avait alors l'âge de vingt-cinq ans. Mais Dieu — qu'il soit loué et exalté ! — voulut en faire son choix. Une nuit, Qardagh vit en songe un bel homme qui frappa son côté avec une lance et lui dit : « Tu seras tué pour l'amour du Christ avant d'achever la construction de cette citadelle. » Qardagh lui dit : « Qui es-tu, toi qui me présages cela? » Et l'homme de lui répondre : « Je suis Georges le martyr[3], disciple du Christ et maître de tout le pays grec. Je viens t'informer de ce que Notre-Seigneur m'a fait connaître. » Qardagh se réveilla effrayé et ne tint plus compte de cette vision. Or, sur la montagne de Beit-Bagaš vivait un ermite du nom de ʿAbdišoʿ. * A p. 66

عرفتك من عرفنيه[1] سيّدنا. فانتبه فزعًا ولم يفكر فى الرويا. وكان فى جبل بابغش رجل حبيس اسمه عبديشوع. فارى ان يمضى الى قردح هذا. فانّه يرث الحياة الدائمة على يده. فلمّا صار اليه امر بضربه وحبسه. ففعل ذلك. فبينا هو واصحابه فى بعض الاوقات يلعبون بالصوالجة فى الميدان اذ التصقت الكرة فى الارض. واجتهدوا فى تحريكها فلم يمكنهم. فقال احدهم لقردح. انى رايت هذا الرجل الذى قد حبسته قد رفع يده وعمل شبه الصليب بازاء الكرة وحرّك شفتيه. فرجع قردح مغمومًا متعجبًا. واحضر الراهب عبديشوع الحبيس. وساله عن اعتقاد النصارى. فشرحه له. فقبل الايمان منه واعمده. واحضر راهبًا يقال له اسحق. فقرا عليه الانجيل الطاهر وترجمه له بالفارسيّة. ومنع نفسه اكل[2] اللحم وشرب الخمر. وفرق على البيع والديارات[3] مالاً جليلًا. واغتم اهله بما شاهدوا من حاله. ومكث على ذلك مدة سنتين وثلثة اشهر ملازمًا للصوم والصلاة. وعرف الروم وغيرهم تقاعده عن الحرب. فدخلوا نواحيه وافسدوها. فخرج اليهم وقال. اظننتم انى قد ضعفت عن الحرب. لا بل

Celui-ci eut aussi une vision dans laquelle il lui fut signifié qu'il avait à se rendre auprès de Qardagh, car ce dernier, grâce à lui, devait hériter la vie éternelle. A l'arrivée de l'ermite, Qardagh ordonna de le flageller et de l'emprisonner. Cet ordre fut exécuté aussitôt. Un jour Qardagh était au cirque à jouer au mail avec ses amis; la boule se colla à la terre. Vainement ils s'efforçaient de la remuer. L'un d'eux dit alors à Qardagh : « Cet homme que tu as jeté en prison, je l'ai vu élever la main, faire devant la boule un signe de croix et remuer les lèvres. » Qardagh revint chez lui affligé et fort surpris. Il se fit présenter l'ermite ʿAbdišoʿ et lui demanda en quoi consiste la croyance des chrétiens. L'ermite la lui expliqua. Qardagh reçut alors de lui la foi et le baptême. Puis il fit venir un autre moine du nom d'Isaac (Isḥaq) qui lui lut le saint Évangile et le lui traduisit en langue persane. Qardagh s'abstint de manger de la viande et de boire du vin; il distribua quantité d'argent aux églises et aux monastères. Sa famille était peinée de le voir agir ainsi. Quant à lui, il vécut de la sorte deux ans et trois mois, s'adonnant au jeûne et à la prière.

Sachant qu'il différait de déclarer la guerre, les Grecs et d'autres nations encore envahirent son territoire et le saccagèrent. Il marcha contre eux et leur dit : « Croyez-vous que je n'aie plus la force de combattre? Non; au contraire, en embrassant le christianisme je me suis armé d'un glaive invincible. » Puis il fondit sur eux et les tailla en pièces. Et, quoique très nombreux, ils furent obligés de s'enfuir devant lui.

De retour de la guerre, il détruisit les pyrées et édifia des églises à leur place. Les mages le dénoncèrent à Sapor, le maudit. « Mais, vous, leur dit celui-ci, vous avez entendu que Qardagh se fit chrétien; qu'il détruisit les pyrées. N'avez-vous jamais entendu qu'il refoula des milliers de Grecs avec ses deux cents cavaliers? N'avez-vous jamais entendu parler des massacres des Arabes, qu'il a accomplis durant sa vie? » Le mobed [1] et les mages désapprouvèrent la parole qu'ils venaient d'entendre de la bouche de Sapor et lui dirent : « Dis-nous franchement si tu veux détruire le magisme et affermir le christianisme. Sinon, pourquoi laisserions-nous en paix cet homme? » Sapor s'attrista par affection pour Qardagh dont il admirait le courage et la vaillance. Et pourtant, il l'envoya en prison, ordonna de le raisonner et de remettre sa cause à sept mois. [Il sera libéré], s'il relève, de leurs ruines, les pyrées renversés par lui et s'il chasse les chrétiens. Sinon, il sera lapidé à la porte de sa maison. Dans ce dessein Sapor lui envoya deux de ses commandants. * Le délai accordé s'écoula; Qardagh demeurait toujours inébranlable dans sa conviction. On le fit sortir pour le lapider. Il demanda alors le moine Isaac pour lui lire l'histoire d'Étienne afin de raffermir son cœur. L'on ne cessa de le lapider à la porte de sa maison jusqu'à ce qu'il eut rendu le dernier soupir. Un nombre immense de personnes se rassemblèrent pour le voir. La nuit venue, les chrétiens prirent sa dépouille mortelle et l'ensevelirent. Cela eut lieu l'an 49 du règne de Sapor [2]. XXXIII. — Histoire de Julien l'Apostat. — Que Dieu le maudisse!

En 672 d'Alexandre, la mort de Constance (Qosṭanṭin), fils de Constantin (Qosṭanṭinous), rendit Julien l'Apostat maître des Romains. Cet impie était versé dans les sciences profanes. Bien qu'il fût le petit-fils de Constantin le Grand, il s'était révolté cependant contre lui. Il se dégagea du joug de l'obéissance, renia sa foi et servit les idoles, auxquelles il offrait des sacrifices. Il réunit les magiciens et les sorciers qui le décidèrent à abandonner la vraie croyance pour le vouer à leurs pratiques impies. Il eut une entrevue à Éphèse[1] avec les deux saints Athanase de Césarée et Grégoire de Nazianze, alors qu'il étudiait la philosophie. Ces deux saints prévoyaient dès lors ce qu'il devait être un jour et tout ce que son mauvais génie lui inspirerait contre les chrétiens. Ils s'en affligèrent et ne manquèrent point d'avertir les fidèles de s'en défier. Dès qu'il arriva au pouvoir, il se mit à poursuivre les chrétiens, les obligeant à embrasser sa religion et à sacrifier aux idoles. Il détruisit les églises et fit élever à leur place des temples aux démons; il massacra nombre de fidèles. Il combattit les barbares et s'empara de leur royaume; il passa pour un autre Alexandre. De Constantinople, il se dirigea vers la Perse. Il immolait des victimes, se livrait à la magie en se servant, pour cet exercice, des entrailles des hommes, des femmes et des enfants qu'il mettait à mort.

Lorsqu'il entra en Palestine, il permit aux juifs de reconstruire le temple pour démentir la parole de Notre-Seigneur : Il n'en restera pierre sur pierre. Mais à peine s'étaient-ils mis à l'œuvre que des tremblements de terre se firent sentir, accompagnés de tourbillons de vent qui renversèrent plusieurs villes voisines de Jérusalem et éparpillèrent tout l'attirail servant à cette restauration. On vit alors, sur les vêtements des juifs, des croix, couleur rouge, qu'on s'efforçait en vain d'effacer. Néanmoins, le malheureux Julien ne tint pas compte de cet avertissement de Notre-Seigneur. Il se dirigea vers la Perse, massacra les uns, emmena les autres en captivité, incendia et ravagea [les villes et les bourgades]. Sapor en eut peur. L'on pensait qu'il avait remporté la victoire sur la Perse, lorsque, près de Séleucie-Ctésiphon (Al-Madaïn), il tomba frappé au côté d'une flèche venant du ciel. Il reconnut alors ce qu'il avait fait. Mais en expirant, il prononça ces paroles : « Tu m'as vaincu, Galiléen! (c'est ainsi qu'il appelait Notre-Seigneur). Le royaume de la terre t'a été donné avec celui du ciel[1]. »

1. On conteste l'authenticité de cette parole de Julien. D. — Elle n'est pas rapportée par Ammien Marcellin (XXV, 3) qui était présent, mais seulement par Théodoret (III, 25 et Sozomène (VI, 2) comme une tradition. N.

Cet impie s'était révolté contre Constantin le Grand dont il était le petit-fils. Il brisa le joug de l'obéissance, renia sa religion et rendit le culte aux idoles qu'il adorait et auxquelles il offrait des sacrifices. Il assembla les magiciens et les sorciers qui l'engagèrent à abandonner la vraie croyance pour le vouer à leur caprice. Au moment de leur rencontre à Éphèse, les deux saints Athanase et l'évêque de Nazianze eurent l'occasion de le voir, alors qu'il poursuivait l'étude de la philosophie et des sciences magiques[2]. Ils prévoyaient ce qu'il deviendrait un jour et le mal qu'il ferait aux chrétiens. Ils s'en attristaient et mettaient en garde les fidèles. Mais lui, il consulta les magiciens sur l'éventualité de sa royauté future. Ceux-ci évoquèrent les démons, l'objet de leur amour. Mais l'impie en eut grand'peur; son âme se troubla lorsqu'il les vit et qu'il sentit leur odeur fétide. Il fit sur lui le signe de la croix, tout en s'endurcissant dans l'incrédulité. Les démons se dispersèrent. L'œuvre des magiciens n'obtint aucun résultat. Ceux-ci blâmèrent son acte et lui dirent : « Ton affaire réussissait déjà à merveille, mais tu as tout brouillé avec ton signe de croix. » Mais l'impie infortuné leur présenta des excuses et promit de ne plus recommencer à l'avenir. De nouveau ils évoquèrent les démons, versèrent la corruption et l'iniquité dans son cœur, sans qu'il eût, cette fois, faibli en leur présence[1].

D'autres expliquent ainsi la cause de son impiété : Avant son pèlerinage à Jérusalem, la sœur du roi lui avait confié, à l'insu de son frère, une somme notable, ainsi qu'un instrument remarquable fait d'or et d'argent. A son retour, elle réclama ses biens. Il méconnut ses droits et nia tout. Le roi, mis au courant, blâma sa sœur de sa folle confiance en lui. « Pourquoi ne m'as-tu pas confié cela? lui dit-il; qu'as-tu trouvé de si séduisant en lui? — Mais son jeûne et sa prière, » répondit-elle. Julien agissait ainsi en véritable hypocrite. Le roi prononça contre lui la sentence suivante : A défaut d'une preuve juridique, il devait affirmer par serment son assertion. Il consentit et prêta un faux serment. Cette sécurité le tranquillisa et le démon posséda son cœur. Il déserta la religion et se montra tel qu'il était. Il interdit aux prêtres et aux moines le port de l'habit ecclésiastique (?) et envoya tuer Anthuse (Qomboll a)(?), la mère de Jean Chrysostome et une foule considérable de fidèles vertueux.

Rome et leur fit un discours dans lequel il leur apprit ce qui les attendait et les maux qu'ils devaient supporter durant la crise imminente. Puis il les exhorta à la patience et leur promit en récompense le royaume des cieux. Il ne cessait de les encourager, d'inculquer la joie à leur cœur, en vue de les préparer au martyre et à la souffrance. Il persistait à les exhorter jusqu'à ce qu'ils fussent complètement disposés. Celui dont le cœur appartenait encore à l'empereur, celui-là ne se conformait pas aux recommandations du patriarche, mais obéissait, au contraire, aux ordres de l'Apostat ainsi que les païens et les juifs, toujours attachés à l'empire. Ils étaient environ 60.000 personnes ceux qui restèrent en union avec le patriarche et demeurèrent inébranlables.

Quelques jours après arrivèrent [à Rome], avec le cousin maternel de Julien l'impie, les porteurs des présents, lettre et lance; ils se dirigèrent vers l'Église. Mais le patriarche y avait placé des portiers pour les empêcher d'y entrer, de peur qu'ils ne profanassent l'Église de leurs pieds impies. Ils dirent aux portiers : « Allez, obtenez-nous la permission d'y entrer, car on nous a intimé l'ordre d'obéir au patriarche. » Quand Eusèbe apprit ce qu'ils venaient de dire, il se présenta à eux comme un roi spirituel. Ils le saluèrent et l'informèrent de tout ce que l'empereur lui avait écrit. Mais lui, leur enjoignit l'ordre de lire la missive. La lecture terminée, il saisit cet écrit de leurs mains, le déchira et leur dit : « Allez dire à cet ignorant qui vous a envoyés que son royaume sera déchiré comme l'a été sa lettre et que son sang sera versé sur un autre territoire que le sien. » Ils se répandirent dans la ville et racontèrent ce qui était arrivé à la lettre de l'empereur; ils menacèrent les habitants d'un grand malheur. Les païens et les juifs se rendirent chez le cousin de Julien, porteur des présents, et lui promirent obéissance. Bien plus, ils lui conseillèrent de construire, la nuit, autour de l'Église une muraille afin d'enfermer, comme dans une prison, ceux qui se trouvaient au dedans, et d'élever au dehors un autel pour les sacrifices. Celui-ci exécuta leur conseil et écrivit à Julien sur ce qui venait de se passer. Dès que les chrétiens eurent connaissance de cette construction, ils se précipitèrent vers les monastères et les églises, chez les moines et les fidèles et leur dirent : « Allez, rejoignez le patriarche et ses compagnons, car on vient de les emmurer à l'intérieur du temple. » Moines, religieux et religieuses, hommes et femmes s'assemblèrent à l'instant, renversèrent la muraille et garrottèrent le cousin de l'Apostat. Les compagnons d'Eusèbe réclamèrent qu'on brûlât ces impies avec le bois disposé sur l'autel.

Le patriarche le leur défendit. Mais ils n'en tinrent pas compte; ils violèrent son ordre et les brûlèrent. Le patriarche chercha à sauver le cousin de

L'Apostat en fut courroucé; il fit venir son astrologue et lui dit : « Vois et examine ma destinée. » L'astrologue répondit : « Je sais que tu seras vainqueur au commencement de ton règne; mais la fin m'est complètement cachée. » L'Apostat lui dit : « J'ai pris la ferme résolution de me servir de mon épée pour massacrer les habitants de Rome sans épargner personne, d'incendier cette ville et de la rebâtir ensuite. »

L'astrologue fit son calcul et lui dit : « Tu ne pourras pas y arriver; et si jamais tu essaies d'infliger pareil châtiment à ses habitants, tu seras vaincu par eux, car cette ville est gardée par deux vieillards. Et si tu n'appuies pas ton pouvoir sur Rome, et si tu ne reçois pas d'elle le diadème, tu ne seras jamais appelé roi, mais plutôt maître par force. Montre-toi donc bienveillant afin d'obtenir d'elle le titre de roi et de voir ton nom s'affirmer avec ceux des rois. Si Rome te reconnaît pour roi, tu auras soin d'en sortir et là où tu iras, tu remporteras la victoire. »

Le scélérat se mit en marche vers Rome, mais personne n'alla à sa rencontre. Il écrivit aux habitants de la ville pour les informer que, loin de leur en vouloir, il était plutôt disposé à leur pardonner. Puis il leur intima l'ordre de venir au-devant de lui, le troisième jour, fête des dieux, vêtus d'habits blancs, puisqu'il avait lui-même l'intention de se parer des vêtements royaux et de ceindre la couronne, de graver son nom au palais des rois et de distribuer beaucoup d'argent aux troupes romaines. Dès que sa lettre fut lue et communiquée aux habitants de Rome, ceux-ci se vêtirent de noir et allèrent à sa rencontre le troisième jour. Cette conduite l'irrita démesurément. Il leur dit alors : « J'ai mal fait de vous traiter avec bienveillance, j'aurais dû me venger de vous. » Ils lui répondirent : « Jamais tu ne revêtiras chez nous le manteau royal; jamais tu ne ceindras la couronne dans notre pays. Car, bien avant notre rencontre, tu as eu soin d'annoncer la persécution et de faire précéder, par des menaces, ta promesse de bien agir. Jamais nous ne te confére-

Il leur écrivit ensuite une lettre qui fut lue à l'assemblée. Il leur disait qu'il avait résolu de recevoir l'habit royal dans cette ville, la première de l'empire romain, et de réjouir ses habitants. Chacun d'eux sera laissé libre dans le choix de sa religion et de sa croyance; et en cela ils se distingueront des habitants des autres villes. Il leur ordonnait en même temps de s'habiller en blanc et de se rendre au-devant de lui. Les Romains changèrent d'habits et se parèrent avec luxe et élégance. L'apostat les gratifia d'une somme considérable d'argent. Tous s'adonnèrent alors, en sa présence — et cela durant sept jours — aux divertissements, au jeu et à la danse avec des jeunes filles.

Puis l'Apostat dit à son astrologue : « Permets que je pardonne aux Romains; mais je ne puis laisser la vie à ce vieillard infâme », c'est ainsi qu'il appelait le patriarche. L'astrologue lui répondit : « Ne t'oppose pas à cet

Mais le patriarche repoussa ceux qui voulaient le garrotter; puis il monta lui-même sur l'autel et s'assit au milieu du bois. L'empereur ordonna de lancer contre lui le feu de tous les côtés de l'autel. Mais à peine avait-on exécuté l'ordre qu'un vent violent se leva et fit monter le feu dans la nue; il en sortit alors du tonnerre et des éclairs; le feu se divisa (ainsi) en deux, et brûla tous les hommes chargés du bûcher, avec les idoles, et un grand nombre d'infidèles. Mais le scélérat, l'impie, sauta sur un de ses rapides coursiers et put échapper. Le saint patriarche restait (sain et sauf) debout à sa même place; et il descendait de l'autel, adorant encore Dieu et lui demandant un miracle. Il retourna à l'Église où il fut reçu par la prière, la joie et les pleurs, à cause des choses sublimes qu'on venait de voir. Trois jours après, l'impudent et maudit Julien monta sur son trône immonde et fit venir le saint patriarche et lui dit : « Ne crois pas que c'est le Dieu des chrétiens qui a fait cela; mais les dieux se sont irrités contre les pontifes[1]... pour avoir placé sur l'autel une victime impure. Aujourd'hui sera le jour de ta perte; va le dire au Nazaréen, ton sauveur. » Le patriarche lui répondit : « Tu sauras bientôt de quelle manière le Nazaréen te perdra et te rendra l'objet des conversations des hommes. »

Le maudit ordonna au saint de se tenir debout, enjoignit aux archers de se placer devant, de lancer sur lui des flèches et aux bourreaux de rester derrière et de le sabrer dans le cas où il voudrait échapper aux flèches. Or, chaque flèche retournait contre celui qui l'avait lancée et le tuait. L'impie s'en irrita et ordonna aux bourreaux de le sabrer. Mais celui qui dégainait son sabre avait aussitôt la main desséchée, et il laissait échapper son arme. L'impie dit alors au patriarche : « Ta sorcellerie arrive-t-elle jusqu'à ce point? »

L'astrologue dit à Julien : « La royauté t'appartient déjà. Sors de cette ville et donne la liberté à ce vieillard. » Mais Julien ordonna d'enchaîner le saint, de le charger de fers et de le jeter dans un cachot. Puis il quitta Rome avec son armée pour se diriger vers Constantinople. Il écrivit ensuite aux habitants de cette ville comme il avait écrit aux Romains. On lut sa lettre; un des nobles[1] se leva alors et la déchira. On en appela au témoignage du cousin de l'Apostat. Comme ce dernier s'approchait de la ville, on accourut au-devant de lui, le priant de pardonner à ce noble qui venait de déchirer sa lettre. Il acquiesça à leur demande. Mais l'homme en question se vêtit du costume des garçons de son service[2]; et à la première occasion il lui donna un soufflet en lui disant : « Le malheur te poursuivra durant ton règne. » Et la couronne tomba de sa tête. On frappa cet homme avec des lances, et il expira. Ceux qui avaient intercédé pour lui auprès de l'empereur réclamèrent son corps pour l'inhumer. Ceci leur fut accordé.

Julien choisit parmi les nobles de la ville un homme sage * qui s'appelait Jovien (Youbeniânous), et l'établit chef de son armée. Il l'emmena avec lui à[1]... Quatre cents prêtres juifs vinrent de Jérusalem à sa rencontre, portant une couronne et les sept idoles[2]. De prime abord, il s'en méfia et les prit pour des chrétiens. Mais, ayant su qu'ils n'étaient pas chrétiens, il leur dit : « Si vous êtes obéissants, mangez de la viande que la loi vous interdit. » Ils en mangèrent; puis ils adorèrent les dieux et leur sacrifièrent à plusieurs reprises. Il les accueillit ensuite avec faveur, prit la couronne et leur promit qu'à son retour du voyage, il ferait reconstruire le temple qui avait été détruit par Nabuchodonosor (Bakhtanaṣar). * A p. 72

Ayant eu connaissance du luxe et de la grandeur de l'église d'Édesse (Ar-Rahâ), l'Apostat ordonna à Jovien (Youbeniânous) de la démolir et de s'emparer des marbres très riches qui s'y trouvaient. Jovien lui dit : « Notre règne est de cent ans; si nous dépensions les trésors publics pour construire semblable édifice, nous n'y parviendrions certainement pas. Il serait plus raisonnable de fermer cette église et d'y apposer les scellés impériaux, jusqu'à notre retour. Alors elle sera lavée, purifiée et consacrée à nos dieux. » Julien approuva le conseil de Jovien et écrivit aux habitants d'Édesse, les assurant de ses faveurs et de son admiration pour la splendeur de leur ville. promit également de leur envoyer quarante hommes d'entre les ministres des dieux pour purifier ce bel édifice et l'affecta aux sacrifices offerts aux dieux. Les Édesséniens déchirèrent sa lettre et empêchèrent ses hommes d'entrer dans leur ville. Dès qu'il apprit cet incident, il enjoignit au chef de son armée de marcher contre eux avec les troupes. Mais celui-ci lui dit : « Les chrétiens croient que mourir pour la religion, c'est vivre. De plus, cette ville est toujours entre nos mains et notre règne est de cent ans. Et puis nous avons maintenant à nous diriger vers le territoire des ennemis; allons-y tout de suite de peur qu'on n'y prenne garde et qu'on ne nous ferme les portes de la Perse. En outre, les Édesséniens auront peut-être, à notre retour, regretté leur faute. » L'Empereur apprécia la justesse de ces remarques et lui ordonna de diriger les troupes vers l'orient. Le chef de l'armée partit et gagna Nisibe (Naṣibin). Quant aux habitants d'Édesse, ils couvrirent de sacs les murailles de la ville et jetèrent sur eux la cendre, signe de leur profonde tristesse pour la perte du règne de Constantin. Comme l'apostat passait par Ḥarran, il fut bien reçu de ses habitants, infidèles comme lui, qui ne manquèrent pas de calomnier les chrétiens. Il fêta chez eux les fêtes des dieux et leur distribua de l'argent. Puis il chevaucha vers Nisibe (Naṣibin). Il allait accompagné d'une foule, lorsque le cheval se montra rétif. Il le frappa de la verge. Le cheval tourna la tête vers lui; la bride s'accrocha à son vêtement et déchira sa pourpre; la couronne tomba et l'enseigne royale, portée devant lui, se brisa. Il y avait à Nisibe un évêque qui s'appelait Ola'[1]. Il harangua les fidèles en disant : « Si quelqu'un aime le royaume des cieux, qu'il me suive au village de Ma'arē[2], qu'il embrasse avec nous la foi et qu'il n'abandonne plus jamais l'amour du Christ. » Des milliers d'hommes le suivirent et firent serment de fidélité sur l'Évangile qu'ils avaient placé au milieu d'eux. Jovien (Youbinianous) eut connaissance de ce fait et se dirigea vers eux. Lorsqu'il les vit, il leur manifesta ses pensées, qu'il avait tenues secrètes, et resta parmi eux, avec le ferme propos de ne plus retourner au camp. Mais il vit en songe l'ange du Seigneur, qui lui dit : « Le Christ a agréé ta résolution; ne t'at-

Or le chef des armées de Sapor le maudit, roi de Perse,... était, lui aussi, croyant [1]. L'ange vint les trouver tous les deux, et apprit à chacun la conversion de l'autre au christianisme.

Lorsque Julien était à Ḥarran, Jovien écrivit à Ourphhârmobaṭa [2] le chrétien et le chef des troupes perses, lui disant que les soldats romains marchaient déjà contre les Perses, qu'ils étaient plus disposés que ceux-ci à recevoir la foi, qu'il fallait par conséquent cacher la nouvelle au roi Chosroès [3] et ménager la victoire aux Romains. Le général perse répondit à l'invitation de Jovien et lui conseilla de hâter le pas avant que le roi n'en prît connaissance et ne disposât son armée. Puis il promit de tout ordonner pour la conquête de toute la Perse et pour lui livrer, vif, le roi, afin de le remettre à César. Ce dernier ferait crever (?) les yeux à Chosroès et le ferait passer au milieu des soldats romains. Quant aux soldats persans, ils seraient également livrés à César.

Julien entendit, un jour, réciter des prières à Ma'arā[1]. Il demanda ce qu'étaient ces voix. Un adversaire de Jovien lui apprit que le chef des chrétiens s'y était réuni avec Jovien qui secoua (?) le joug de l'obéissance et partit (?) [à Ma'arē] avec quelques-uns de ses amis. Jovien y restait avec eux, ajoute son adversaire, et sacrifiait à leurs dieux, et cela durant tout le séjour du roi à Ḥarran. Julien envoya des troupes pour assiéger (?) Ma'arē et manda Jovien. Puis il ordonna de déchirer la tunique de celui-ci et de le destituer de sa charge. Mais de crainte de soulever contre lui les nobles de Constantinople, il ne le fit pas périr, car Jovien appartenait à la noblesse de cette ville. Il mit son adversaire à sa place, celui-là même qui le calomniait. Mais, par un effet de la Providence, l'envoyé de Jovien près du général persan arriva à propos; il portait, cousue sous ses habits, la réponse à la lettre de Jovien. * Or le successeur de ce dernier s'empara du messager. * A p. 74
Celui-ci lui apprit qu'il venait de voir le général persan auprès de qui Jovien l'avait envoyé. L'adversaire de Jovien dit à l'Apostat : « Celui dont tu écoutais les avis et suivais les conseils était en correspondance avec tes ennemis. » Julien interrogea l'envoyé qui lui révéla la vérité, décousit son vêtement et montra la lettre. L'empereur la lut, et y constata que le général persan acceptait la proposition que nous avons rapportée plus haut. Il en éprouva

Il préparait notre victoire, alors qu'à nos yeux il passait pour un homme suspect : nous aimions celui qui le calomniait. » Puis il ordonna de lever le siège de Maʿarē et de ne plus contrarier personne dans sa croyance : que chacun soit libre dans le choix de sa religion et qu'il prie pour notre triomphe, puisque nous sommes à la veille de livrer bataille à nos ennemis. Quant à Olaʿ[1] et à sa suite, nous leur laissons pleine liberté de rendre le culte à leur Dieu afin qu'ils lui fassent des vœux pour nous obtenir la victoire. Il fit venir ensuite ceux qui avaient calomnié Jovien en commençant par celui qui s'était fait nommer son successeur. Il les fit frapper aux côtes et ordonna de les crucifier. Puis il proclama dans l'armée qu'ainsi sera récompensé quiconque dira encore du mal de Jovien. Il présenta des excuses aux habitants de Constantinople (Qosṭanṭinyah) et leur demanda de lui amener Jovien. Ils le lui présentèrent. Julien le revêtit de nouveau, le fit monter dans son char et ordonna aux nobles de marcher devant lui, précédés des crucifiés. C'est ainsi qu'il passa triomphalement au milieu des soldats romains. Lorsque Jovien fut de retour auprès de l'empereur, celui-ci lui remit la lettre d'Ourphhârmobaṭa[2] et lui dit de ne pas tarder à exécuter la teneur de la lettre et de lui assurer par serment qu'il ne lui en voulait pas de ce qu'il avait fait. Et les habitants n'eurent pas le temps de se reconnaître que déjà les Romains pénétraient au cœur de la Perse, pays très prospère et en pleine paix. Ils passèrent les habitants de ce pays au fil de l'épée, pillèrent les citadelles inaccessibles et les villes fortifiées; enfin ils se rendirent maîtres de la région. D'autres disent qu'il avait sous son commandement environ 490.000 combattants.

Témoin de l'excessive effusion du sang, le vertueux Jovien dit à Julien : « Il vaut mieux que nous soyons maîtres d'un pays prospère que d'un pays en ruine et que d'être jamais appelés meurtriers. De plus, si la terre n'est pas bien peuplée, elle ne pourra pas nous faire vivre. Il serait plus favorable de transférer les habitants d'une ville à une autre. » Le roi se rendit à son avis et l'on proclama la paix. Les Perses supportèrent le traitement dont ils furent l'objet; ils en remercièrent l'empereur et formèrent des vœux pour lui. Quant à Sapor, il s'enfuit à Ispahan. Autour de sa tente sacrée, il y avait des bêtes féroces[1]...., mais qui n'osaient attaquer aucun visiteur du saint. Des chasseurs frappèrent de l'épée l'une de ces bêtes (?)[2]. des prodiges qu'il accomplissait[3]. Lorsque Sapor les vit tous deux, lorsqu'il vit la gloire, la lumière et la splendeur dont ils étaient revêtus, il les accueillit avec beaucoup de respect, leur témoigna de la vénération et une grande affabilité. Il écouta leurs paroles avec complaisance et les traita familièrement. Les mages leur portèrent envie et entrèrent en discussion avec Mar Eugène (Awgin). Vaincus en présence de Sapor, ils persistèrent néanmoins à le contredire. Mar Eugène se tourna alors vers Sapor et lui dit : « Que le roi ordonne d'allumer en sa présence un grand feu. Nous y entrerons avec les mages qui sont en discussion avec nous. Celui qui y restera sain et sauf, Mar Eugène dit alors à Mar Yonân : « Jette-toi dans le feu, mon frère. » Mar Yonân, voulant étonner encore plus le roi Sapor et les mages, ôta les sandales de ses pieds, jeta son vêtement sur ses épaules, et alla, pieds nus, s'asseoir au milieu du feu qui pétillait autour de lui et voltigeait, en gerbes de flammes, au-dessus de sa tête. Sapor, qui avait pensé que Mar Yonân ne resterait pas longtemps sain et sauf au sein de cette fournaise, resta stupéfait, rendit grâces à Dieu — qu'Il soit exalté! — et dit aux mages : « A présent, montez-y vous-mêmes et restez-y, si vous le pouvez, avec les Nazaréens. » Ils refusèrent. Le roi leur dit alors : « Réfléchissez bien aux conséquences de votre refus et à la peine qui vous attend. Je ferai hacher vos membres et piller vos maisons. » Aussitôt dit, aussitôt fait. de ses miracles et prodiges. Ils sont si nombreux! Il recommanda par testament à son ami, le Marzban[1], lors de sa translation au Paradis, que la tente qu'il habitait fût transformée en un lieu de prières, où le nom de Dieu serait loué et glorifié. Or, après la mort de ce saint père, on l'enterra à la place occupée naguère par la tente. Puis l'on construisit près de là un temple et plusieurs cellules.

Les frères et les habitants de ce pays voulurent porter de la tente à un autre endroit le corps de Mar Yonân[2]; mais ils ne parvinrent pas à s'entendre (?). Des guêpes sortirent de la tombe et les attaquèrent. L'un d'entre eux vit en songe une personne qui lui disait : « Ne vous fatiguez pas; * le Christ a choisi un homme pour le transférer d'ici à l'autre temple. » * S p. 5
Or il se manifesta à Mar ʿAbda, fils de Ḥanif, et lui ordonna d'aller prier près de Mar Yonân et de porter son corps au temple d'Anbar. Mar ʿAbda se rendit au désert d'Anbar. Tous les frères se réunirent, et, portant la croix et l'Évangile, ils s'y rendirent à leur tour. Ils saluèrent le Père et se mirent en prière. Puis l'anachorète Mar ʿAbda, fils de Ḥanif, entra en oraison et se prosterna devant le cercueil de Mar Yonân. Il éleva ensuite le cercueil avec les frères. en couvent un édifice autrefois consacré au culte des idoles et aux démons. Mais chaque fois que les moines de ce couvent descendaient puiser de l'eau à la fontaine, les démons les lapidaient. Comme les mauvais traitements devenaient de plus en plus violents, ils exhumèrent le cercueil du saint et l'exposèrent, trois jours durant, près de la fontaine; cette lapidation cessa. Puis on le transféra de nouveau au couvent où il fut enfin enseveli dans la salle des martyrs. Que ses prières protègent les fidèles!

aussi le persan, étudia les livres de l'Église et se distingua dans la science médicale. Et, sous des habits étrangers, il passait son temps dans la maison de Dieu. Jamais il ne prenait de viande ni de vin. Dès son jeune âge, il pratiqua la vie érémitique. La réputation du saint parvint à Sapor qui le fit venir auprès de lui. Le saint soigna la femme du roi, qui souffrait d'une maladie, et la guérit. Sapor le prit en grande affection. Mais il avait une sœur, du nom de Širarân, qu'il avait épousée suivant la loi des mages. Or le démon la possédait et la tourmentait. Pour obtenir la guérison de sa sœur, Sapor s'était adressé à tous les médecins, sorciers et astrologues. Vainement ils lui conseillaient tous les remèdes possibles et imaginables. Elle vit en songe un personnage qui lui disait : « Reine, ne t'afflige pas de ta douleur; crois à la religion chrétienne, fais-toi baptiser et tu seras guérie. » Elle pensait à cette vision, lorsque la nuit suivante elle eut un songe étonnant, dans lequel quelqu'un lui disait : « Širarân, ne crains pas; Dieu t'a choisie, et du royaume terrestre il te fera sortir; tu deviendras alors sa servante et tu seras guérie de tes souffrances. Crois, fais-toi baptiser, et le démon t'abandonnera. » Elle envoya mander de l'église de Séleucie (Al-Madaïn), Baršaba, que personne, de ce temps, n'égalait. Elle l'informa de ce qui lui était arrivé. Le saint lui exposa alors la croyance des chrétiens, lui fit savoir ce dont elle avait besoin et lui montra l'horreur de la religion des mages. Elle crut, reçut le Baptême et renonça au culte des créatures. Le démon l'abandonna. Mais elle s'adonna à la recherche de la science. Les mages en furent très étonnés. Quand cette nouvelle parvint à Sapor, il se mit en colère et ne crut pas que le démon l'avait abandonnée. Il se proposait de la tuer, si elle ne voulait plus adorer le soleil. Le Marzban de Merw, descendant de Sassan, était en présence de Sapor quand ce dernier quitta Nisibe après le traité de paix avec Jovien (Youbinianous). Sapor exposa au Marzban l'état de sa sœur, et lui ordonna de la prendre avec lui pour l'éloigner des chrétiens * et de tous ceux qui pourraient l'instruire du christianisme. Et cela de peur qu'il ne lui advînt comme à sa femme Esṭassa, qui fut tuée pour la religion chrétienne. Bien plus, il permit au Marzban de l'épouser. Daniel, fils de Marie (Maryam), en parle dans son livre [1]. Le Marzban la prit avec lui et l'épousa. Mais avant son départ, elle avait demandé aux évêques de conférer l'épiscopat à Baršaba puisque, après le martyre de Barba'šemin, il n'y avait plus de patriarche à cause de la défense de Sapor. * A p. 2

Arrivée à Merw, elle ne cessait de gagner à la religion chrétienne tous ceux qui venaient chez elle. Elle leur racontait l'épreuve dont elle fut guérie dès qu'elle eut embrassé le christianisme. Elle leur démontrait l'horreur de leurs croyances et leur promettait la visite de Baršaba. Plusieurs habitants de Merw se rendirent à sa parole. D'origine grecque, ils étaient venus avec Alexandre en cette ville et avaient assisté à sa fondation ; mais ils n'étaient pas retournés avec lui. Ils reçurent la foi et brisèrent les idoles qu'ils adoraient.

Puis elle demanda à des architectes de lui construire une église. Ne sachant quelle forme lui donner, ils la construisirent sur le plan du palais du roi de Perse. Elle l'appela Ctésiphon, du nom des Villes.

Elle eut un fils du Marzban. Elle écrivit à Sapor, le priant de lui envoyer Baršaba, car son mal l'avait reprise. Sapor, heureux de la naissance de l'enfant, lui envoya Baršaba en grande pompe. Celui-ci prit avec lui des prêtres, des diacres, et quelques livres liturgiques et des ornements aussi. Arrivé à Merw, il fut reçu par une foule de personnes. Puis il se rendit à l'église et remercia Dieu du présent dont Il avait favorisé la reine. Il consacra l'autel, baptisa les gens, et guérit les malades. Il conféra aussi le baptême à bon nombre de mages. Puis il y construisit plusieurs églises et leur assigna des fonds, des vignes et d'autres biens. Gloire à Dieu généreux et tout-puissant! De la maison du roi, ennemi des chrétiens et leur persécuteur en tout lieu, il suscita un prédicateur du christianisme dans tout le pays du Khorassan. En effet, les disciples de Baršaba se dispersèrent dans toutes les villes du Khorassan, construisirent des églises et baptisèrent des hommes. Puis Baršaba mourut et fut enseveli dans le monastère connu sous le nom de David (Daoud). Sa mort consterna les habitants de ces pays qui le pleurèrent pendant trois jours. Ils virent, le quatrième jour après sa sépulture, une lumière sur sa tombe, y respirèrent une bonne odeur et entendirent une voix qui disait : « J'ai entendu le son de votre voix; j'ai exaucé vos prières et je vous ai rendu Baršaba votre évêque qui reprendra sa charge de paître vos âmes. » Alors Baršaba sortit de la tombe en présence de tous les hommes. Quelques-uns eurent cependant des doutes sur ce fait et dirent qu'il s'agissait d'un fantôme. Mais ils trouvèrent son œil gauche transformé et crurent à la vérité de sa résurrection. Plusieurs embrassèrent alors la foi. Et Baršaba vécut après cela quinze ans. Son épiscopat avait duré 70 années. son peuple, c'était aussi pour secourir ceux qui s'étaient convertis du paganisme, pour maintenir leurs enfants dans la foi, pour affermir leurs âmes et pour augmenter leur foi et leur croyance à la résurrection ainsi que Dieu avait agi avec Moïse lorsqu'il le laissa dans le désert jusqu'à la mort de tous ceux qui étaient sortis avec lui d'Égypte. Seuls leurs enfants, qui ne connaissaient pas les dieux des Égyptiens, vécurent après lui et entrèrent dans la terre promise.

Bien des fois, Dieu avait opéré le miracle de la résurrection lorsqu'il le voyait utile au bien des âmes. Il a ressuscité saint Georges, le martyr, qui revint à la vie après sa mort. Et, à cause de cela, plusieurs embrassèrent la religion du Christ. Les chrétiens de toutes les sectes et de tous les empires reconnaissent le mérite de ce martyr, font mémoire de lui et construisent des églises sous son vocable.

Après la mort de Širazân, Aspahid du Khorassan, Sapor fit parvenir les robes d'honneur à son neveu Khošken, le fit succéder à son père, lui ordonna de se marier avec sa sœur, fille de Širarân. Celui-ci obéit. Khošken était bienveillant envers les chrétiens. Sa mère, sur le point d'expirer, lui avait recommandé de prendre soin des églises, de protéger les chrétiens et de diminuer les impôts qui pesaient sur eux. Elle les recommanda aussi à la bienveillance de sa fille. Tous deux luttèrent de zèle pour obéir, et cela durant toute leur vie, aux ordres de leur mère. Quant à sa fille Zarndoukht, elle confessait la religion des mages, qui était aussi celle de son père. Et, néanmoins, elle avait à cœur l'intérêt des églises et des chrétiens.

٤١ ذكر خبر ربّن[1] شليطا

XLI. — Histoire de Rabban Šallita[1].

A cette époque parut à Alexandrie saint Šalliṭa. Il lutta contre le démon par sa bonne conduite et tint tête aux Ariens. Le gouverneur de cette ville, arien et ennemi acharné des fidèles, le frappa et le chassa de la ville. Le saint alla dans le pays des Coptes. Il y guérit un lépreux. Ce miracle décida une foule de personnes à recevoir le Baptême. Puis il alla à Nisibe avec Mar Eugène. Mais après la dispersion de ses disciples dans différentes régions, Šalliṭa se dirigea vers Beit-Zabdâï, où il convertit les habitants de toute une ville, brisa une idole qu'on y adorait et fit élever à sa place un couvent connu encore sous son nom de nos jours. Puis il se rendit à Balad pour recevoir la bénédiction de quelques saints. Mais il y mourut et fut inhumé dans une caverne connue sous le nom d'Awana, vis-à-vis de Balad, * à l'endroit appelé Al-Douaïr et situé dans une forêt[2]. ٤٢ خبر الزلزلة والبرد

فى هذا الوقت فى سنة ستمائة وثمانين للاسكندر كانت زلزلة شديدة فى المشرق والمغرب. ووقع فى القسطنطينية برد كبار مثل الحجارة فى شهر تموز. وزاد المآء زيادة مسرفة حتى اغرق خلقاً ومدناً كثيرة من بلدان الروم. ووقعت نيقية باسرها. ووقعت ببلد فارس ثلثة مدن من الزلزلة. وكان ذلك تاديباً من الله للناس ليطيعوا ويتوبوا من خطاياهم.

En 680 d'Alexandre, il y eut en Orient et en Occident un grand tremblement de terre. En juillet, des grêlons de la grosseur d'une pierre tombèrent sur Constantinople. L'eau déborda et submergea nombre de personnes ainsi que plusieurs villes romaines. Nicée (Niqyah) fut détruite. Le tremblement de terre détruisit trois villes en Perse. C'était le châtiment infligé par Dieu aux hommes pour les amener à l'obéissance et à la pénitence.

XLIII. — Histoire d'Ardašir (II), frère de Sapor (II), et de Sapor fils de Sapor.

Le règne de Sapor avait duré 70 ans, 11 mois et quelques jours. Sa mort, l'an 686 d'Alexandre [2], amena sur le trône son frère, Ardašir, qui était son héritier et qui habitait Ninive [3]. Les mages, qui l'avaient en horreur, l'insultèrent en face. A l'instar de son frère, il observait, à l'égard des chrétiens, une attitude hostile et les massacrait. Mais quatre ans après son élévation au trône, les troupes ourdirent contre lui une conspiration qui aboutit à le détrôner; on mit à sa place Sapor (III) fils de Sapor[1], et cela eut lieu la quinzième année du règne de Valens (Wâlis). Ardasir en tomba malade de chagrin et mourut. Sapor (III), fils de Sapor, répandit ses bienfaits sur les troupes et les gratifia largement. Il se tourna du côté des chefs, leur demanda de lourds impôts, qu'il augmenta encore. Il accorda la liberté aux chrétiens prisonniers. « Car, disait-il, en les mettant en liberté, ils reprendront leur vie et paieront tribut, ce qui sera plus utile à l'État. » Les mages eurent grand'peine à remplir ces obligations, et délibérèrent entre eux sur son assassinat. Un jour qu'il était allé à la chasse, il essaya, pour se reposer, de s'endormir sous une tente. Une fois qu'il fut assoupi par le sommeil, ils tirèrent les pieux de la tente qui tomba sur lui et le tua. Son règne avait duré cinq ans.

XLV. — Histoire de Théodose le Grand[1].

Valens (Wâlis) brûlé, Gratien s'associa à l'empire, après la mort de son frère, Théodose le Grand. Celui-ci était très brave, vainqueur dans les guerres, clément et d'une foi sincère. Pour venger la mort de Valens, il attaqua les barbares * qui l'avaient brûlé. Il les mit en déroute et revint à Constantinople après la mort de Gratien (Kharṭinous). En 690 d'Alexandre, le gouvernement de tout l'empire passa en ses mains. Il rappela les évêques exilés par Valens, chassa les Ariens qui avaient dominé l'Église pendant 40 ans, depuis la sixième année de Constantin, date de leur concile d'Antioche, qui avait exilé saint Athanase, patriarche d'Alexandrie, et Paul (Phoulé), patriarche de Constantinople. La deuxième année de son règne, Théodose ordonna la convocation à Constantinople de 115 Pères[1] dont les chefs étaient Mélèce (Miliṭous), patriarche d'Antioche, et Diodore (Dioudourous), évêque de Tarse * A p. 5

On voyait parmi les Pères Hellade (Alidis) de Césarée, Grégoire de Nysse (Noussa), Grégoire de Nazianze, Amphiloque d'Iconium, Ambroise et l'archidiacre représentant Damase, patriarche de Rome. Ils approuvèrent la croyance des 318 [1], et frappèrent d'anathème Macédonius, patriarche de Rome [2] et ses partisans, qui déniaient au Saint-Esprit d'être égal, en substance, au Père et au Fils.

La cinquième année de son règne, Théodose donna l'ordre de codifier toutes les doctrines en un seul livre. Cet ordre fut exécuté. Puis il plaça le livre sur l'autel et fit une prière. Il vit en songe qu'il n'y avait pas de vraie foi en dehors de celle des 318, et de l'égalité des personnes. Alors il jeta au feu les autres professions; il chassa les partisans des fausses doctrines et détruisit, dans l'empire romain, les temples des idoles.

Il fit marcher contre les habitants de cette ville un grand nombre de Barbares, au cœur dur et à l'âme insensible. Ils en massacrèrent 7.000 personnes. Mais, à son arrivée à la ville, Théodose voulut se présenter à l'église. Le patriarche Ambroise (Ambrosious) lui interdit d'entrer plus avant, le fit sortir du lieu saint, l'anathématisa et lui dit : « Hier, tu répandais le sang, sans égard à la fidélité, et tu oses aujourd'hui franchir le seuil de l'église ? » Théodose, à l'humilité profonde et à la foi sincère, obéit à Ambroise, témoignant par là son grand respect du sacerdoce. Consterné et profondément contrit, il se retira tout en larmes, ne cessa de pleurer sa faute pendant huit mois, s'abstint d'entrer à l'église et de recevoir l'Eucharistie. A l'approche de Noël, il pria un certain Rufius [2], ami du patriarche, de lui obtenir d'Ambroise la permission d'entrer à l'église le jour de la fête et de recevoir l'Eucharistie. Rufius demanda au patriarche de faire grâce à Théodose : « Il supporte, lui dit-il, depuis huit mois, sa peine. Il ne faudrait plus, en raison de son obéissance, l'empêcher d'entrer à l'église. » Mais le patriarche tint ferme et déclara qu'il le chasserait, s'il venait à prendre part à la solennité de la fête. Théodose se présenta cependant, ce jour-là, à la porte de l'église;

Il y entra à condition toutefois qu'il ne punirait plus désormais personne sans instruire, au préalable et durant trois jours, sa cause. Une fois qu'il était à l'intérieur, le patriarche Ambroise lui dit : « C'est le plus beau jour de ta vie, mon fils; car tu as reconnu la faiblesse humaine. » Mais le roi voulant se placer dans le sanctuaire que les rois se réservaient, le patriarche le lui défend en disant : « Ce n'est pas l'habit royal qui te confère le sacerdoce : tu ne dois pas te placer ici. » Le roi lui dit que le patriarche de Constantinople accordait à ses pairs le privilège de se tenir dans le sanctuaire. Ambroise répondit : « Les patriarches de Constantinople flattaient les rois; ne sais-tu pas qu'Isaïe fut privé du don de la prophétie parce qu'il laissa le roi 'Osia dépasser les limites de sa dignité royale. » Théodose répondit : « Je suis prêt à vous obéir. » Il sortit alors du sanctuaire et se plaça avec le peuple, au milieu de l'église. Il alla ensuite à Constantinople. Lorsqu'il se présenta à l'église, il se plaça encore avec le peuple. Le patriarche Nectaire le désapprouva et lui dit : « Pourquoi te places-tu là où il ne te convient pas d'être? » Mais Théodose répondit : « Le Père Ambroise m'a ordonné d'agir ainsi; je ne désobéirai pas à ses ordres. » Qu'elle est belle l'obéissance des rois!

leurs excréments et lavait, de ses mains, leurs plaies. Et, avec ses servantes, elle les visitait chez eux, les servait dans toute sorte de maladie, les habillait et leur donnait l'aumône. Elle alla même jusqu'à Antioche exercer ces actes de charité. Cela irrita l'esprit mauvais qui poussa quelques-uns des siens à l'insulter et à la chasser de l'église [1]. La nouvelle parvint aux oreilles de Théodose qui fit semblant de n'en rien savoir et dissimula sa colère pendant trois jours. Puis il envoya à Antioche deux généraux, avec une armée très forte pour la livrer au feu. Chemin faisant, les deux généraux rencontrèrent un moine vénérable qui était dans la montagne. Celui-ci leur dit : « Arrêtez-vous ; n'exécutez pas les ordres qu'on vous a donnés. Votre maître est un homme mortel, périssable, qui, bientôt, n'aura plus d'existence. Mais Dieu l'a établi roi de ses créatures formées à son image afin d'en convertir les égarées, de supporter les insensées et de pardonner aux coupables. Il n'est donc pas roi pour chercher son propre intérêt et anéantir une foule de personnes, à cause d'un seul de ses sujets, mortel comme lui. Et si le roi pouvait s'indigner contre un homme qui briserait, par mépris, sa statue faite de bronze ou d'argent, à plus forte raison le Créateur s'indignerait [de voir massacrer les hommes faits à son image]. Que le roi donc ait toujours Dieu présent à son âme. »

Les deux généraux écrivirent au roi sur ce qui s'était passé entre eux et le moine. Sa colère s'apaisa, et la flamme de son ressentiment s'éteignit ; il accepta la parole de l'ermite et rappela les deux généraux, qui s'en retournèrent.

Lorsque Mar Flavien (Flouianous), compagnon de Diodore, fut accusé de professer une foi perverse[1], le roi lui ordonna d'aller se défendre en Occident de ces accusations. * Le prévenu dit alors : « Si l'on m'accuse à cause de ma foi ou de l'impureté de mon corps, ou de l'injustice de mes jugements; si l'on m'accuse d'avoir accepté des présents pour dénaturer la vérité, ou d'avoir corrompu par l'or et l'argent, protégé le mensonge, je choisirai des juges équitables, estimés du roi et de ses amis, pour me défendre en leur présence. Si l'on parle contre moi à cause du siège que j'occupe, ou bien à cause de mon autorité, je n'ai nul besoin de tout cela ni d'autre chose. » Le roi fut surpris de son courage, de la beauté de son langage et de son mépris pour ce qui est recherché des autres mortels. Puis il lui ordonna de conserver sa charge et de continuer à gérer les affaires de ses ouailles. * A p. 7

Il arriva qu'un homme du plus bas peuple suivi d'une grande multitude de vagabonds et de mendiants se révolta contre Théodose et l'attaqua. Cette attaque lui causa une grande inquiétude[2]. Il alla trouver un certain moine, Jean (Youḥanna) le gardien, qui vivait sur une montagne. Il lui raconta la révolte de ses ennemis, et lui fit part de l'inquiétude de son cœur. Celui-ci répondit : « Aie confiance en Dieu; ne crains pas. » Le roi victorieux n'y ajouta pas foi et n'eut pas confiance en la parole de l'ermite. Quand vint la nuit, il vit en songe ce même moine[3] accompagné de Philippe (Philiphous).

A cheval devant les troupes, tous deux leur disaient : « Ne craignez pas; Dieu est avec vous; il vous donnera la victoire. » L'un de ses généraux eut la même vision dont il fit part au roi. Tous en furent alors encouragés. Mais le chef ennemi, fier du grand nombre de ses soldats, se montrait arrogant à leur égard. Il disait aux siens : « Si Théodose tombe entre vos mains, liez-lui les bras avec une chaîne et amenez-le-moi. » Au plus épais de la mêlée, l'ennemi fut mis en déroute : Dieu dispersa ses troupes, anéantit ses soldats et le fit tomber dans les pièges qu'il tendait au roi. Enchaîné, l'ennemi fut, en effet, emmené captif à Théodose, peine qu'il croyait infliger à ce dernier.

Après cela Théodose mourut à Antioche [1], âgé de soixante-six ans, dont dix-sept passés sur le trône. Ses deux fils le transportèrent à Constantinople, où il fut enseveli. Arcadius, son fils, lui succéda sur le trône. Le patriarche Nectaire (Phaqṭarek) mourut la même année. Arcadius fit élever au patriarcat de Constantinople Jean (Youḥanna) Chrysostome qui avait la même doctrine que Théodore l'interprète.

فى ايام تياذاسيس الملك الكبير جمع تاوفيلوس فطرك الاسكندرية جماعة القديسين بريّة مصر واستعان بصلواتهم فى هدم هيكل سرقيس الذى كان الشيطان يظهر فيه. ولمّا هدم الهيكل وجد هناك حجر عليه مكتوب. اذا ملك ثلث تات يهدم هيكل سرقيس. فكانت التآء الاولى. تاون. والتآء الثانية. تاوفيلوس. والتآء الثالثة. تياذاسيس. وتياذاسيس هذا أبطل الحنوفيّة من مملكته وتشبّه بقسطنطينوس الملك المظفر فى افعاله. وجمع المائة والخمسين اسقفاً فى السنة الثانية من ملكه. وفى السنة الخامسة من ملكه أشرك فى الملك ابنه ارقديس واجلسه فى القسطنطينيّة. وفى السنة الخامسة عشرة من ملكه ملك ابنه اريوس[1] وأجلسه برومية. وكانت القسطنطينيّة قد اضطربت فى ايام واليس من الاريوسيّة. لانّهم جعلوا عليهم فطركاً محتالاً خبيثاً * اسمه ديموفولوس. وجعل الارثادكسيّة اعنى الصحيحي الاعتقاد اوغريس. وكان ملفاناً مقاوماً الاريوسيّة. فلمّا ملك تياذاسيس نفى ديموفولوس بعد ان دبرّ * A p. 8

XLVII. — La destruction du temple de Sarkis[1].

Au temps de Théodose le Grand, Théophile, patriarche d'Alexandrie, convoqua l'assemblée des saints dans le désert d'Égypte et demanda leurs prières pour la destruction du temple de Sarkis, où le démon faisait des apparitions. Le temple démoli, on y trouva une pierre portant cette inscription : « Si les trois T viennent à régner, le temple de Sarkis sera abattu. Le premier T s'appliquait à Théon, le deuxième à Théophile, le troisième à Théodose. Or ce dernier anéantit le paganisme dans son royaume et, par ses actes, ressembla à Constantin le vainqueur. Puis il réunit les 150 évêques, la deuxième année de son règne. La cinquième année de son élévation au trône, il s'associa son fils Arcadius et le fixa à Constantinople; la quinzième, il offrit la royauté à son fils, Honorius, et le fixa à Rome.

Parmi les Grecs, mentionnons : Grégoire le Thaumaturge; Grégoire évêque de Nysse, frère de Basile; Grégoire, patriarche d'Alexandrie; Grégoire, le Théologien, évêque de Nazianze; Grégoire qui convertit les Arméniens. En Perse, nous avons : Grégoire, le solitaire, qui composa un livre sur la vie monastique; Grégoire, évêque de Nisibe; Grégoire, le Catholicos, patriarche d'Orient; Grégoire, le Docteur à Séleucie-Ctésiphon; Grégoire du monastère de Gamra, qui commenta le Psautier.

Il commenta le Cantique des cantiques et fit des dissertations sur le symbole de la foi. Il commenta aussi le précepte de l'humilité, recommandé par Notre-Seigneur, et d'autres préceptes qui conduisent au royaume [des cieux]. Il écrivit des traités sur la création de l'homme, sur l'âme et sur la résurrection et aussi des homélies pour les jours de fêtes; il composa encore beaucoup d'autres livres. Grégoire qui convertit les Arméniens au christianisme était grec. Il s'enfuit pour échapper à Dioclétien et demeura dans les montagnes de l'Arménie, où il servait Dieu. Le patricien de l'Arménie alla un jour à la chasse autour de la caverne de Grégoire et sacrifia à ses dieux. Il fut fort surpris de la solitude de ce dernier et de ses mortifications. Une seconde fois, il y alla aussi à la chasse avec Waṣa[1], roi des Arméniens, qui, voyant le saint, lui demanda d'offrir un sacrifice à ses dieux. Celui-ci s'y refusa. Sans connaître son histoire, il ordonna de le flageller et de le jeter dans une fosse pleine d'insectes. Le roi, perdant la raison et le sentiment, se mit à déchirer ses vêtements et à mordre son corps. Sa femme lui conseilla alors de faire sortir le saint de la fosse. Il le fit sortir et lui demanda de prier sur lui. Après la prière de Grégoire, il fut guéri de sa maladie et reçut le baptême avec toute sa maison. Depuis lors, on commença à mentionner ce roi à l'église dans le livre des vivants.

La réputation de Grégoire parvint à la connaissance des Grecs. Et, sur la demande du roi Waṣa (?), Léonce (Laritus) de Césarée (Qeisaryah), l'un des 318, le sacra évêque pour les Arméniens. Waṣa (?) le roi et Grégoire réussirent à conquérir à la foi chrétienne toute l'Arménie. Ils édifièrent des églises et détruisirent les temples des idoles. Lorsque l'armée de Sapor marcha contre Waṣa (?), celui-ci la tailla en pièces, grâce aux prières de Grégoire.

Les Arméniens refusèrent, au concile de Chalcédoine, de prononcer anathème contre Sévère (Sawarra) et sa secte. Après la mort de Grégoire on faussa la croyance des Arméniens ainsi que leur foi. Le jeudi de Pâques, ils offraient un agneau; mais, à l'instar des Juifs, ils lui donnaient du sel à manger avant de le tuer.

Grégoire[1] qui composa un livre sur la manière de diriger la vie monacale était de la Susiane (Al-Ahwâz), originaire de la ville de Nastir. Il raconte dans son livre qu'un moine vit en songe un homme qui s'approcha de lui et lui remit un anneau : « Prends, lui dit-il, cet anneau; tu seras maître de ta plume et tu écriras ce qui te plaira. » Après avoir réfléchi sur cette vision, il lui vint à l'idée d'écrire un livre sur la direction [de la vie religieuse]. Il vit le ciel ouvert. Notre-Seigneur et Sauveur était assis sur le siège de sa gloire, et les troupes angéliques se tenaient debout devant lui. La terre s'agitait; les morts ressuscitaient. Puis il se réveilla et alla à Nisibe où il tomba malade trois mois durant; il fut sur le point de mourir. Il vit alors deux anges, habillés en moines, qui s'approchèrent de lui et le guérirent. Cette vision ressemble à celle d'Origène. Puis il alla de Nisibe à Édesse. Il acquit

XLIX. — Histoire de Flavien (Flavianous) et de son disciple Diodore (Diodourous).

Ce saint était grec. Lorsque Julien (Lelianous) défendit aux chrétiens l'étude de la philosophie, il lui désobéit et se sacrifia lui-même (pour la science). Diodore était d'abord disciple du savant et vertueux Silvain (Selouanous), évêque de Tarse. Il étudia à fond auprès de celui-ci la philosophie et en acquit une connaissance si profonde que personne ne pouvait le vaincre dans les controverses. Après la mort de Silvain, Diodore resta auprès de Flavien, se fit religieux, marcha sur les traces de son nouveau maître, vécut avec lui et s'inspira de sa science. Il se rendit à Antioche pour y combattre quelques ariens, entra en discussion avec eux et dévoila la perversité de leur doctrine. Il montra l'erreur d'Eunémius, rebelle à la vérité, qui niait l'âme au Verbe incarné de Marie, prétendant que Dieu n'avait pas besoin d'une âme. Cette opinion perverse découlait de la doctrine d'Arius. Mais Diodore dévoila l'erreur de cet hérésiarque que le roi chassa avec son maître.

الاولياء متشلح[2] من اللاهوت. لكنه اله متانّس الم بالناسوت بالصلب وانبعث من القبر واظلم الشمس وصدع الصخر وفتح القبور وبعث الموتى باللاهوت. ووضع نحو ثمنين كتابًا كشف فيها عوار كل مبدع وفضح قول كل متعدّ. وكان بينه وبين الثلثمائة والثمنية عشر والمائة والخمسين خمس وخمسون سنة. ولمّا قوى اهل مذهب اريوس بميل واليس الى قوله اشتدّ تعب هذين الابوين بهم وطال اختفآوهما منهم. واحتال ديوذوروس فيعرض للملك وقد تخرج للتصيّد. فاقبل يتبختر فى مشيته بين يديه. فانكر ذلك منه وقال. ما هذه المشية. فقال له.

1. ܫܡܫ recitavit officium liturgicum. — 2. Spoliatus est ܐܫܬܠܚ ex تشلح.

Un jour qu'il était en Perse, Diodore entendit chanter l'office à deux chœurs comme l'avait prescrit Ignace, disciple de Jean l'Évangéliste; il se souvint alors qu'il avait entendu naguère les anges chanter de la sorte.

Diodore fut sacré évêque de Tarse. Il composa trois livres contre le manichéisme, trois livres contre l'arianisme, et un livre contre Macédonius pour prouver que le Saint-Esprit est consubstantiel au Père et au Fils. Le meilleur de ses ouvrages est la réfutation d'Apollinaire. Il composa sept livres dans lesquels il réfute Photin (Phouṭinous), Marcelle (Maqellous) et Paul de Samosate, et prouve la divinité de Notre-Seigneur contre ces hérésiarques qui prétendaient
* A p. 11 *qu'il était dépourvu, comme tous les autres justes, de la divinité; il prouve aussi que le Christ est un Dieu incarné qui souffrit sur la croix dans son humanité, et que par sa divinité il ressuscita du sépulcre, ouvrit les tombeaux et rendit la vie aux morts, il fit obscurcir le soleil et fendit les rochers. Il composa près de 80 livres dans lesquels il dévoile la perversité des innovateurs, et réfute la doctrine des faussaires. Cinquante-cinq années le séparaient des 318 et des 150 Pères.

Comme les ariens étaient fort soutenus et fortifiés, sous Valens, par la faveur impériale, ils infligèrent à ces deux Pères beaucoup de peines et les obligèrent à se cacher devant eux. Mais, comme le roi allait un jour à la chasse, Diodore voulut se présenter à lui. Il se mit à se dandiner en marchant devant le roi. Celui-ci désapprouva cette attitude et dit à Diodore : « Quelle Alors elles sortirent de leurs chambres pour l'éteindre. Ainsi moi, j'étais caché. Mais le feu d'Arius, allumé par l'empereur Valens, a pris à l'Église du Seigneur. Alors moi je suis sorti pour l'éteindre, avec ceux qui pouvaient m'aider. » Le roi s'irrita de ces paroles.

Lorsque Valens expulsa de son siège Eusèbe de Samosate[1], celui-ci habita le désert. Mais chaque fois qu'il apprenait que les Ariens détruisaient les autels de ses églises et massacraient ses prêtres, il se déguisait alors en soldat, se couvrait d'une coiffure (Qalansawa) et allait de-ci de-là pour consacrer des prêtres et des diacres selon les besoins de ses ouailles. Quelques ariens le reconnurent. On insinua à une femme, au cœur inaccessible à la pitié, la pensée de lancer du haut d'une terrasse, ce qu'elle fit, une grosse pierre sur la tête de l'Évêque. Celui-ci en mourut. Il défendit de le venger.

symbole de la foi, ceux-ci rendirent témoignage à l'orthodoxie de Diodore, à la vérité de sa doctrine, à l'ampleur de sa science et à la pureté de son corps. Théodose lui porta une grande affection et le retint auprès de lui à Constantinople. Diodore vécut longtemps au point que son corps devint très maigre et sa peau très mince se colla à ses os. Il mourut, et Chrysostome, pour célébrer le jour de sa mort, composa trois oraisons funèbres. Mais Cyrille, homme importun, contredit Mar Nestorius et dénigra Diodore. Théodoret (Tiadouritous) lui écrivit à ce propos : « Homme de malheur, importun, tu as trop affligé Mar Diodore que tu as dénigré après sa mort. Et pourtant
* A p. 12 tu connaissais bien son mérite, sa science et son savoir; * tu connaissais aussi les épreuves que ses ennemis lui avaient infligées; tu n'ignorais pas non plus qu'il a dépassé, par sa souffrance, Jean-Baptiste auquel le compare Jean Chrysostome. C'est qu'en effet il a dérouté les innovateurs Valens et Manès l'impie, Arius l'imposteur et tous ceux qui se sont détournés de la vérité. Cyrille, si tu as invectivé Diodore c'est parce qu'il est mort et qu'il se repose dans sa tombe, et puis parce que tu as contrarié saint Nestorius qui a suivi ses traces. Mais Diodore n'a point dévié du droit chemin; il n'a jamais eu peur de châtiments et ne s'est pas dérobé aux flèches du mensonge. »

L. — Histoire des moines hérétiques, Siméon (Sim'oun), Hermas (Hermès), Dadoès (Dâdo) et Eusèbe (Eusabius) connu sous le nom d'Eustache (Eutakhy) [1].

En ce temps-là parut ce groupe de moines dans quelques monastères, près d'Édesse. Ils feignaient de marcher sur les voies tracées par Antoine (Anṭounis) et Macaire (Maqâris), mais la réalité était tout opposée. Ils prétendaient être arrivés à un degré si élevé de spiritualité que le Saint-Esprit leur apparaissait et s'entretenait avec eux. Ils ne cessaient de prier et de veiller; on leur donna le nom de Meṣalliens [2]. Ils croyaient, en effet, que, après douze ans de prière et de jeûne, si l'on disait à une montagne de se transporter à un autre endroit, elle se transporterait infailliblement. Et quiconque, après ces douze ans de dévotion, viendrait à dire à une montagne de se transporter sans que celle-ci lui obéisse, ce serait le signe que son idéal (de perfection) n'est pas atteint; il lui faudrait alors recommencer toujours ce même exercice jusqu'à ce qu'il arrive à ses fins.

Mar Théodoret (Tadurous) dit dans son livre sur la vie religieuse que le chef de la secte Meṣallienne s'appelait Eusèbe (Eusabius) ; que ce dernier disait à ses adeptes : « Quiconque n'accomplirait de tous les commandements, que

Les partisans de cette secte se recrutaient parmi une foule de gens nus et errants[1]. Cette doctrine fut combattue et réfutée par .....[2] et Diodore. Elle provient, dit-on, de Beit-Garmaï. On raconte qu'Eusèbe-Eustache avait cinq disciples. Il croyait qu'il n'y avait qu'un seul Dieu, dit Père, Fils et Esprit-Saint; que le corps du Christ était un fantôme puisqu'il a été créé par Dieu subtil et spirituel; que le crucifiement du Christ n'était qu'apparent. Il défendait la prière commune. Il croyait que les songes provenaient du Saint-Esprit; qu'il n'y avait aucun profit à recevoir l'Eucharistie; que le Saint-Esprit établissait sa demeure chez ceux qui accomplissaient sa parole. Il ne défendait cependant pas * le péché de la chair. Il enseignait qu'il n'y avait plus de faute ni de péché après l'avènement du Christ et que l'épilepsie avait pour cause l'Esprit-Saint. * A p. 13

Basile nous laissa, entre autres ouvrages, un livre sur l'Hexaméron, une explication de quelques psaumes remarquables du prophète David, plusieurs traités sur le jeûne et la prière, un écrit sur la règle de la vie monastique, des lettres et des polémiques avec Eunomius.

Lorsque Grégoire fut transféré, au temps de Théodose, du siège patriarcal de Constantinople, Maxime lui succéda. Ce dernier, d'abord orthodoxe, ne tarda pas à pervertir sa foi. Au concile des 150, les Pères eurent connaissance de sa situation, le déposèrent et lui donnèrent pour successeur Nectaire (Touphetrous), préteur de la ville. On décréta dans ce concile que le patriarche de Constantinople tiendrait la seconde place après celui de Rome. (Grégoire de Nazianze) mourut au temps de Théodose et eut pour successeur Eulalius.

Les deux frères de Basile, Grégoire de Nysse et Pierre de Sébaste, marchèrent sur ses traces et assistèrent au concile des 150.

Cet hérésiarque enseignait que le Saint-Esprit a été créé. Plusieurs évêques se réunirent à son sujet et lui firent des remontrances. Aucun d'eux ne pouvait lui faire changer d'opinion, ni le réduire au silence. Enfin, perdant patience, ils cherchèrent à s'associer, dans les débats, Saint Théodore l'interprète, disciple de Diodore. Ils l'amenèrent avec eux [aux débats]. Quand Macédonius entendit son argumentation, il eut peur que Théodore ne mît à nu sa perversité et qu'il ne détruisît sa doctrine. Il refusa d'entrer en discussion avec eux, disant : « Je suis patriarche, et je ne discute pas avec un prêtre. » Les Pères, au nombre de 150, se rendirent alors à l'Église et conférèrent, la nuit même, à Théodore l'épiscopat. A l'imposition des mains, ils disaient dans l'oraison récitée sur lui : « Le Saint-Esprit a rendu parfait Théodore le prêtre en le consacrant évêque pour l'Église de Dieu. » Le lendemain

Puis on rédigea l'hymne : « Père, Fils et Esprit-Saint, ayant un seul et même royaume[1]. » Et cela eut lieu soixante-dix ans environ après

Il écrivit à Antioche pour qu'on ne fasse pas mention du Saint-Esprit comme ayant la même substance que le Père et le Fils. Les Antiochiens n'avaient pas d'Évêque. Ils choisirent Mélétius (Milaṭous), homme pur, juste et orthodoxe. Consacré évêque, il se mit à prêcher et à mentionner le Saint-Esprit avec le Père et le Fils [1] : « Nous reconnaissons et nous confessons, disait-il, trois hypostases qu'il faut adorer d'une même adoration, puisqu'elles ont la même substance. Quand nous adorons le Père, nous adorons avec lui, le Fils et l'Esprit. » L'auditoire ne le comprit pas. Alors il étendit sa main et dit : « Voici ma main; elle a une seule et même essence, mais elle a plusieurs noms. » Puis il étendit trois de ses doigts et dit : « Ces doigts ont-ils trois substances ou bien une seule? » On lui répond : « Une seule substance, mais ils sont au nombre de trois. » Puis il plia deux de ses doigts, en laissa un seul étendu et ajouta : « L'essence de ce doigt étendu est-elle différente de celle de ces deux que je viens de replier? » — « Non, » répondit-on. Ensuite il plia le doigt étendu et étendit les deux qu'il avait pliés et dit : « Ces deux qui étaient pliés diffèrent-ils d'essence de celui qui était étendu? — « Pas le moins du monde. » — Il en est de même de l'essence des trois hypostases : une seule essence en trois personnes. » Dès que les ennemis de la vérité entendirent ce discours, ils se bouchèrent les oreilles pour ne pas entendre la parole que le Saint-Esprit venait de prononcer par la bouche du Saint. Puis ils le firent descendre de la chaire où il se tenait debout, l'expulsèrent de son évêché et le déposèrent du sacerdoce. Ils élirent, à sa place, un autre évêque, partisan de leur doctrine. Ces hérétiques plongeaient dans l'eau, la tête en bas, jusqu'à la poitrine, celui qui se présentait au baptême, sous prétexte que l'âme a son siège dans le cerveau et le cœur et que, seule, elle a besoin de purification. Les autres parties du corps, surtout les membres génitaux de l'homme et de la femme, ne devaient pas être baptisés : ils souillent le baptême.

contemporains? Qui pourra décrire, comme il convient, sa sagesse et la justesse de son jugement? Cet homme admirable et sans rival est, par excellence, le modèle de la perfection. Gloire à Dieu, qui a donné à cet homme un génie inconnu avant lui dans l'argumentation apologétique et l'invention exégétique pour tous les livres de l'Ancien et du Nouveau Testament.

Théodore, originaire d'Antioche, était issu d'une famille aisée et fort riche.

Jeune encore, il s'adonna, quinze ans durant, à l'étude de la philosophie et des sciences, et à l'examen des faits extraordinaires racontés dans les livres, pour en donner une explication. Le Saint-Esprit le soutint, se rendit maître de ses forces et disposa son âme aux études d'exégèse. Théodore eut pour l'Esprit-Saint un amour très vif, semblable à celui d'un amoureux. Il devint disciple de Basile le Grand et désira vivre de la vie cénobitique; mais les moines refusaient, pour les raisons suivantes, de l'admettre dans leur communauté : 1° Théodore était encore trop jeune; 2° ils craignaient de s'attirer la colère de son père; 3° ils avaient l'habitude de ne pas dépasser un certain nombre déterminé de sujets; 4° ils voulaient éprouver sa sincérité et sa patience. Mais lui, il demeura une année entière à la porte du monastère, sans manifester aucune lassitude, louant sans cesse Dieu, récitant les paroles des Écritures qu'il expliquait. Les moines, reconnaissant alors son mérite et sa patience, lui permirent d'entrer au couvent. Il y resta vingt et un ans à servir les deux savants et vertueux Pères Flavien (Flouina) et Mar Diodore (Diodourus),

احدى وعشرين سنة. وكانا عالمين فاضلين. فامتار من علمهما. ونظرا اليه بروح القدس. فحكما عليه انّه لا يتقدّمه احد فى اختراع التأويل. فسألاه جميعًا ان يفسر الكتب. ففسر وبرهن وجوّد وأحسن. وكان من قرب منه من الاساقفة او بعد يرغب فى استماع كلامه والانتفاع بعلومه. ومن قصده انصرف عنه متاسفاً على فراقه. ولما خالف ماقيذونيس

et acquit la science. Inspirés par l'Esprit-Saint que Théodore était un incomparable exégète, ces deux Pères lui demandèrent alors de commenter les saints Livres. Il composa un commentaire juste et bien raisonné.

Les évêques, ses voisins et d'autres de fort loin, éprouvaient un vif désir d'entendre sa parole et de tirer profit de sa science. Quiconque l'approchait s'éloignait de lui avec regret.

Lorsque Macédonius, patriarche de Constantinople, faussa la vraie doc-
* A p. 16 trine, * prétendant que le Saint-Esprit était créé, qu'il n'avait pas la même essence que le Père et le Fils, il demanda aux Pères de lui montrer dans les saints Livres le texte qui atteste que l'Esprit-Saint est éternel et consubstantiel au Père. Et, s'ils ne le trouvaient pas, ils seraient dans la nécessité d'admettre et professer sa doctrine. Personne ne pouvait combler cette lacune, ni fournir une preuve évidente qui pût soulager leur âme angoissée. Tous s'adressèrent à Théodore et le prièrent de dissiper les ténèbres répandues sur l'Église de Dieu, de les soulager et de faire briller la vérité aux yeux de l'assemblée. Macédonius et ses partisans s'en aperçurent. Ils se découragèrent, car ils s'attendaient à éprouver une grande confusion; ils refusèrent d'entrer en discussion avec Théodore sous prétexte qu'il était simple prêtre. D'un commun accord, les Pères le sacrèrent évêque dans l'Église du Christ.

Puis le saint se rendit à une ville où se trouvait une idole, du nom de Mopsos. Bâtie sous son vocable, la ville fut appelée Mopsueste; ses habitants adoraient cette idole. A son entrée dans cette ville, quelques-uns saisirent le saint et lui dirent : « Il faut que tu adores notre dieu que nous voyons ; il nous manifeste ses miracles et ses prodiges, alors que tu nous invites à rendre le culte au crucifié. » Le saint les traita avec sagesse et n'eut pas peur de leur tumulte. Quand ils virent que Théodore repoussait avec douceur leur demande, ils tentèrent de placer l'idole dans la partie antérieure de l'autel ; une construction élevée devant elle la cachait. Le saint monta à l'autel; mais il sentit une mauvaise odeur et vit en esprit l'image horrible de l'idole. Il se mit à prier et fit, sur le mur, un signe de croix. Le mur se fendit, et l'idole s'inclina, la face tournée vers le saint. Celui-ci la prit et la jeta au feu. Alors la plupart des habitants de la ville embrassèrent sa doctrine.

D'autres prodiges, plus éclatants encore, furent accomplis par son intermédiaire : un juif se rendait auprès de lui pour écouter ses sermons, et désirait vivement recevoir le Baptême et la foi chrétienne. Empêché, une fois, d'aller chez le saint, ce juif fut surpris par la mort. Mais, quelques jours après son inhumation, le saint eut connaissance de sa mort. Il en éprouva une grande affliction et se reprocha d'avoir tardé à lui donner le Baptême. Mais se confiant à Dieu et à Jésus-Christ, il se rendit avec quelques personnes auprès de sa tombe. tance. Puis il donna l'ordre de l'exhumer. Quand il apparut à découvert, le mort se leva, et sortit de la fosse. Le saint fit apporter de l'eau, le baptisa et lui dit : « Veux-tu retourner à la tombe et au repos ou bien rester sur cette terre de fatigues et de peines? » Le juif préféra la mort à la vie. Théodore le signa alors d'un signe de croix; le juif s'endormit sur sa couche. Le saint l'ensevelit et repartit.

Personne n'est capable de décrire, comme il convient, les vertus extraordinaires de ce saint. Cyrille, avant de combattre le vertueux Nestorius, disait : « Théodore ressemble à l'or pur. » Mais vaincu par le démon, ce même Cyrille revint sur sa parole, comme le chien revient à son vomissement. Arrivé à l'explication du passage suivant des Épîtres de saint Paul : « ne nous est-il pas permis de manger et de boire, ou de nous associer une sœur qui nous serve comme les autres apôtres, les frères du Seigneur et Céphas », ce saint pensait, au témoignage de quelques-uns, que Paul mettait sa parole en pratique. Aussitôt après cette pensée, l'Esprit-Saint le priva de sa grâce. Il ne pouvait plus expliquer aucun mot ni en découvrir le sens. Il s'adonna alors au jeûne, aux veilles et à la tristesse tout en priant Dieu de lui rendre la grâce qu'il venait de perdre. Enfin, accablé par le chagrin, il se prosterna, la face contre terre. Puis il se réfugia auprès de la tombe de la vertueuse Thècle (Taufila) qui accompagnait les apôtres dans les pays, faisait des miracles et baptisait les femmes. Il se jeta sur sa tombe et lui demanda de prier le bienheureux Paul de pardonner sa faute commise en esprit. Il s'endormit ensuite. Il vit en songe, assis sur une chaise, près de la tombe, un vénérable vieillard, aux cheveux blancs et d'une beauté remarquable. Il vit également la sainte debout à côté de lui, le priant ardemment de délier Théodore. « Après de longues prières, dit Théodore, le vieillard s'approcha de moi, fit un signe de croix sur mon cœur, me remit quatorze clefs et me dit : « Avec « ces clefs ouvre n'importe quelle serrure. » Je me suis réveillé, ajoute Théodore, et tout ce que je voulais me fut ouvert. Alors, j'ai conçu des idées que je n'avais jamais eues auparavant et j'ai commenté les quatorze Épîtres de Paul l'Apôtre. »

Il commenta le Nouveau Testament, Jérémie, Ézéchiel et Daniel. Il composa un livre dans lequel il réfutait tout innovateur; il remplit ce livre d'excellentes choses et il l'appela « le livre des perles », puisqu'il ressemble à des perles précieuses bien disposées en ordre. LIV. — * Histoire de Mar Ephrem, dit le prophète syrien. * A p. 19

Selon le récit de Siméon, de Samosate, qui fut, depuis son jeune âge jusqu'à sa vieillesse, disciple et serviteur de Mar Ephrem, le père de ce dernier était de Nisibe (Naṣibin) et sa mère d'Amid. Son père s'appelait Michaq (?); il était prêtre d'une idole, du nom d'Abizal. Mais ce père s'irrita de ce que son fils était attaché au service d'un certain chrétien, du nom de Jean. Il frappa Mar Ephrem et lui dit : « Le Dieu que je sers, je le sers à cause de toi, je lui demande pardon de tes fautes, je le prie de faire grandir ton mérite et d'étendre au loin ton nom, alors que toi, tu as suivi l'erreur des chrétiens. » Puis le démon parla à ce vieillard, son serviteur, de l'intérieur de l'idole et lui dit : « Je vois que tu me sers avec dévouement; depuis longtemps tu m'adresses des prières pour ton fils; mais je n'ai pas de chances de le posséder; il est mon ennemi et celui des autres dieux, mes semblables. » Le méchant vieillard dit alors à l'enfant béni : « Éloigne-toi de moi et va là où tu voudras. Tu as irrité les dieux par ton hostilité, ton injustice et ton impiété avec les chrétiens. » Lorsque Mar Ephrem entendit ces paroles, il s'en réjouit; il trouva l'occasion de se rendre à l'église (?) où il reçut le saint Baptême à l'âge de dix-huit ans. Le saint qui le baptisa se mit à lui apprendre les psaumes. Puis les ennemis (de la foi) commencèrent à molester les chrétiens. Afin de s'en préserver, Ephrem partit de là pour Amid; ensuite il se retira à Édesse (Ar-Rahâ). Un moine l'aperçut et lui dit : « Va servir au monastère quelque vieillard et apprendre de lui la règle monastique. » Il s'y rendit et se mit au service d'un moine avancé en âge, qui était très laborieux. Il demeura auprès de lui un an environ.

patriarche est d'un aspect resplendissant, vêtu de soie et de pourpre; que veut-il de moi? » Le serviteur l'emmena de force auprès du patriarche. Le patriarche le salua avec déférence, tandis que Mar Ephrem baissait la tête sans oser la relever. Le patriarche lui dit : « Mon frère, qui es-tu? D'où viens-tu? Quelle est ton histoire? Car j'ai vu deux anges, vêtus de manteaux de feu, jeter sur toi un vêtement semblable, puis s'approcher et se placer enfin à tes côtés. Je t'ai entendu répéter deux fois : Très bien (εὖ). Moi, je parlais en grec. Comment as-tu pu comprendre mes paroles alors que tu avais l'air d'un Syrien? » Mar Ephrem pleura et dit : « Je suis un étranger, je suis un pauvre; tu es un roi riche et puissant; laisse-moi m'en aller. » Basile inclina la tête et dit : « Je ne relèverai pas la tête avant que tu ne me dises qui tu es. Je t'adjure par le Christ Notre-Seigneur, qui t'a accordé cette dignité et cette vertu, de me dire qui tu es. » Lorsque Basile l'adjura ainsi, parce qu'il ne comprenait pas le grec, Ephrem pleura et dit : « Je suis Ephrem, le Syrien. » Saint Basile se jeta à son cou, le pressant sur son cœur et le couvrant de baisers. Puis, il congédia ceux qui étaient chez lui et se retira à l'écart avec Ephrem.

considérable de personnes s'assemblaient auprès d'eux. Mar Basile se mit à prêcher sur les six jours de la création. Il parla si bien qu'il étonna son auditoire. Mar Ephrem en éprouva une grande joie et admira ses paroles spirituelles. Puis il lui fit ses adieux et se retira à Édesse.

Chemin faisant, il fut assailli par une bande d'hérétiques qui entrèrent en discussion avec lui. Il les dispersa tous, déchira leurs livres et réfuta leurs arguments. Mais un jeune homme effronté se trouvait parmi eux. Il donna à Mar Ephrem un soufflet si douloureux que celui-ci tomba par terre comme mort. Puis, la douleur calmée, il se leva et reprit son chemin. Les hérétiques n'étaient pas encore bien loin quand une grande vipère les attaqua et mordit ce jeune homme à la main qui avait souffleté le saint. Le jeune homme en fut tellement atteint qu'il entra en agonie. Quelques-uns de ses compagnons revinrent à Mar Ephrem, et le prièrent d'avoir pitié de cet insensé et de sa pauvre mère qui n'avait pas d'autre enfant. Le saint se rendit avec eux près du jeune homme qu'il trouva mort. Il se prosterna et se mit en prière pendant longtemps. Il demanda à Dieu de lui rendre son âme, de manifester ainsi sa puissance et sa bonté envers ceux qui lui obéissent. Puis il fit sur lui le signe de la croix, le prit par la main, le ressuscita et le remit aux siens. Ensuite il pleura sur leur grande impiété. Un grand nombre se convertit de l'hérésie à la vraie et saine doctrine.

A son entrée à Édesse, Ephrem y trouva neuf opinions dont une seule orthodoxe et les autres viciées. Il combattit et réfuta les partisans de ces opinions; il déploya un grand zèle contre les adeptes de Manès, l'hypocrite, d'Arius, le charlatan, et de Bardesane, le falsificateur. Il les combattit tous et les confondit.

Il leur dit : « Si vous rencontrez un homme couvert de haillons, trapu, chauve, tête grande, barbe courte, vous tâcherez de le saisir et de me l'amener avec soin. Faites en sorte qu'il ne vous échappe et qu'il ne se dérobe. » A leur arrivée à Édesse, les messagers s'informèrent d'Ephrem le Syrien. On les conduisit chez lui. Lorsque Ephrem les aperçut, il comprit pour quel motif ils venaient. Il prit alors un pain et jeta sur son épaule un turban de haillons ramassés dans le fumier; il se mit à courir dans les rues, mordant le pain avec ses dents. Les messagers, le voyant dans cet état, crurent qu'il était fou. Ils le méprisèrent, le prirent pour un sot et se dirent les uns aux autres : « C'est un fou; il ne faut pas l'amener au patriarche, car il nous blâmerait, si nous allions lui présenter pareil individu. » Ils le laissèrent et retournèrent chez le patriarche; ils l'informèrent de l'état indigne de cet homme. Celui-ci leur dit : « Ignorants! insensés! Vous avez perdu une perle précieuse et incomparable; vous avez perdu une mine de science et d'érudition. »

Les œuvres de notre vertueux saint sont nombreuses, et ses connaissances très vastes. Les poèmes de sa composition reflètent un certain accent plaintif, humble, pieux, touchant et larmoyant; par leur caractère triste, ils surpassent les lamentations de Jérémie. Il méprisait les choses d'ici-bas. Sa douceur tendre et son humilité profonde le poussèrent à décliner la dignité de supérieur, dont il était pourtant très digne. Il ne mangeait que du pain d'orge et du sel. Son habit était une mosaïque composée de haillons ramassés dans les fumiers. Du sacerdoce, il n'avait que l'ordre du diaconat, alors qu'il aurait dû être le plus grand des patriarches, le plus digne de l'autorité et de l'estime des hommes. Pour tout dire, en un mot, il dépassa les savants par l'ampleur de sa science et les sages par la sagesse. La vie monastique qu'il menait, ses bonnes mœurs et son ardeur dans la prière sont ineffables. Ḥnanišô bar Srošoï, évêque de Ḥira, fit son éloge en disant : « Océan de sciences! qui peut décrire l'abondance de tes trésors? Mine de trésors! qui donc serait capable d'exprimer la beauté de tes paroles? Qui donc ne pense pas * se taire, lorsque, dans une assemblée, on vient à prononcer ton * A p. 23

وحكى فى بعض الاخبار ان ابن ديصان كان قد وضع انجيلًا مخالفًا لما قاله سيدنا المسيح فى كتابه المقدس. واستغوى به من فى امانته استرخآء وفى قلبه زيغ. وأفسد قلوب جماعة نظروا فيه. فلمّا توفى ابن ديصان وأراح الله البيعة منه ومن شره احتال مار افريم على اخته وسألها ان تدفع اليه ذلك الكتاب لينظر فيه ويرده عليها. فالهها الشيطان محب الفساد ان تسأله ملامستها ليفضحه. فسألته ذلك. فاجابها وقال لها. اعطينى الكتاب انظر فيه ثم اصير الى ما سالتينى من ملامستك ومضاجعتك. قالت. اقسم بالمسيح انك تفعل ذلك وانك ترد الكتاب على اذا ما نظرت فيه. فاقسم لها بالمسيح انّه يفعل ذلك ان اجابته اليه. ولم تمتنع منه. فدفعت الكتاب اليه. فلمّا اخذه منها دعا بغرى مغلى فلطخه به ورقة ورقة. واطبقه وشدّه شدًّا جيدًا حتى التصق ودفعه اليها. واخذ كساه ومضى معها. فلمّا صار فى وسط السوق والناس مجتمعون بسط كساه على الارض وقال. شانك وما سالت. اضطجعى هاهنا حتى اصير الى ما فارقتك عليه. قالت. سبحان الله. هل فى الدنيا من

On raconte dans certaines histoires que Bardesane avait composé un évangile en désaccord avec la doctrine enseignée par Notre-Seigneur dans la sainte Écriture. Il avait séduit les esprits dont la foi était ébranlée et dont l'intelligence était travaillée par le doute; il avait corrompu les cœurs d'une foule de personnes qui lisaient cet évangile. Bardesane meurt et l'Église est libérée de lui et de son iniquité. Mar Ephrem chercha alors à avoir cet évangile. Il le demanda à la sœur de Bardesane[1] et promit de le lui rendre. Le démon, ami de la corruption, aiguillonna la passion de celle-ci, et, pour jeter l'ignominie sur Ephrem, l'excita à lui demander de pécher avec elle. Elle obéit à cette mauvaise inspiration. Mais le saint répondit : « Donne-moi d'abord le livre, et puis je me coucherai à côté de toi selon ton désir. » Elle lui dit : « Jure par le Christ que tu accompliras cela et que tu me rendras le livre, quand tu l'auras lu. » Il jura d'exécuter sa parole, si elle voulait bien y consentir. Elle lui remit le livre. Le saint le prit et enduisit de colle toutes ses feuilles; puis il le pressa fortement pour que la colle prît et le lui rendit dans cet état. Ensuite il prit son vêtement et marcha avec elle. En pleine rue, devant une réunion d'hommes, il étendit son vêtement par terre et lui dit : « Me voici à ta disposition; couche-toi ici afin que je puisse réaliser ma

Ce saint homme vit en esprit Julien l'Apostat, le coupable, déclarer la guerre contre les amis du Christ, solliciter l'aide des troupes du prince des démons et se proposer d'anéantir les fidèles. Pendant seize jours il demeura en oraison. Durant ce temps il ne cessait de parler avec ardeur au Christ Notre-Seigneur et notre Sauveur. Il le priait de manifester sa puissance contre son ennemi, de protéger les chrétiens contre lui et de leur épargner la persécution que se proposait l'apostat. Il ne cessa de prier et de المسيح سيّدنا ومخلصنا بغير فتور ولا انحلال حزم. وساله ان يظهر فى عدوّه آيته. ويكفى المومنين موونته ولا يبلغه فى مكروههم امنيّة. فما اثنى عن صلاته ولا زال عن محاورة سيّده حتى انفذ فيه سهم النقمة واراح الله الرعيّة من الفتنة. ولمّا كبرت سنّه وضعفت حواسه قصد امرأة ارملة لها ابن واحد. فاوته فى منزلها واطعمته من قوتها. فحسده الشيطان باغض الحسنات وقصد اذيّته وغمه. فرمى ابن الارملة فى بئر مآء عميقة. فضجت والدته واستغاثت وقالت. قد تلفت نفس ولدى وفقدت واحدى. فما انزعج قلبه من قولها لثقته بالله فى تخليص ابنها. وصارا الى البئر وهو مطمئنّ وقد غمر المآء الصبى. فرسم على البئر صليب المسيح الذى قد اجتهد فى اكمال طاعته. فقذفت البئر الصبى كما قذف البحر فاس قاطع الحطب بصلاة اليشع. فمد القديس لوليانا يده وتناول الصبى من يد ملك الموت وهو يضحك. فسئل الصبى عن ضحكه. فقال. صرت الى قعر البئر. فنظرت الى هذا الكهل الذى حملنى يضحك فى وجهى ومد يده واثار مآء البئر ورمانى الى فوق فلمّا رايته يضحك فى وجهى ضحكت. وهذا قليل من كثير فضائل هذا القديس حفظنا الله بصلواته وطرد عنا الشرير ونجانا منه.

s'entretenir, dans l'oraison, avec le Seigneur jusqu'à ce que le Christ eut frappé l'apostat d'une flèche de vengeance et délivré ses ouailles de l'épreuve. Dans un âge avancé, alors que ses sens furent affaiblis, il se retira près d'une veuve ayant un fils unique. Il y reçut l'hospitalité et partagea sa propre nourriture. Le démon, ennemi des bonnes œuvres, se proposa, par un esprit d'envie, de l'affliger et de lui porter préjudice. Il jeta le fils de la veuve dans un puits profond. La mère de l'enfant se mit à crier et à implorer le secours du saint, en disant : « Mon fils a péri; j'ai perdu mon enfant unique. » Mais le saint n'en fut pas ému ni troublé, puisqu'il espérait, avec l'aide de Dieu, sauver l'enfant du péril. Il se rendit au puits sans aucune émotion. Mais l'eau avait entièrement couvert l'enfant. Le saint fit sur le puits le signe de la croix du Christ, dont il avait toujours suivi la loi. L'eau vomit l'enfant, comme naguère la mer vomit la hache de celui qui fendait le bois, grâce à la prière d'Élisée. Saint Louliânâ tendit alors la main et reprit à l'ange de la mort l'enfant tout souriant. On demanda à l'enfant le motif de ce rire. « J'ai été jusqu'au fond du puits, répondit-il; ce vieillard qui me portait, je l'ai vu qui me souriait, qui me tendait la main et me tirait par-dessus l'eau qu'il agitait. Quand je l'ai vu me sourire, j'ai ri, moi aussi. »

Voilà quelques-unes seulement des vertus nombreuses de ce saint. Que Dieu nous protège par ses prières; qu'il nous délivre du mal!

٥٦ قصة القديس افيفانس المطران

كان هذا الرجل العجيب يهوديا فى صباه. وتوفى والده وخلف له حماراً. فاحتاج الى بيعه بعد وفاة ابيه. وكانت والدته باقية. فمضى بالحمار الى السوق ليبيعه. وكان الصبى حصيفاً فهماً. فأوكس المشترون ثمنه فى عينه. وكسروه عليه. فنظر اليه قسيس فيه فضيلة مشهورة. فرحمه ورق قلبه عليه واطلعه الله على ما يكون من الغلام بعين روح القدس. فاشترى حماره منه باربعة دنانير ووزن له الثمن ودفع الحمار ايضاً اليه. وقال له. امض فانفق الدنانير على نفسك ووالدتك واحتفظ بالحمار. فمضى الغلام متعجبا من فعل * القسيس. * A p. 25

LVI. — Histoire de saint Épiphane (Aphiphanès) l'archevêque.

Cet homme admirable était juif[1] à l'origine. En mourant, son père lui laissa pour tout héritage un âne. Sa mère vivait encore, quand il se vit dans la nécessité de vendre cet animal. Il le conduisit au marché pour le vendre. Le jeune Épiphane était très intelligent. Les acheteurs lui en diminuèrent la valeur et le prix. Mais un moine, prêtre très vertueux, le regarda et eut pitié de lui. Dieu révéla au moine par l'Esprit-Saint ce que devait être un jour cet enfant. Il acheta l'animal au prix de quatre pièces d'or, qu'il pesa; et il les remit avec l'âne à Épiphane. « Dépense, lui dit-il, ces pièces de monnaie pour ton entretien et celui de ta mère; garde l'âne. » Le jeune homme, étonné de la conduite * du prêtre à son égard, se retira satisfait. L'argent une fois dépensé, il eut encore besoin de vendre l'âne. Il le conduisit au marché où il rencontra le moine qui s'informa de ses nouvelles. Le jeune homme exposa sa triste situation au religieux qui lui dit : « Je te vois, fils, intelligent, prudent et d'un esprit pénétrant, pourquoi ne te fais-tu pas chrétien? — Je n'abandonnerai pas, lui répondit-il, le culte d'un seul Dieu, la pratique de la loi de Moïse et des prophètes, pour suivre un Dieu en trois personnes, dont l'une fut crucifiée, mourut et fut ensevelie. » Le moine lui dit : * A p. 25

اتحب ان اظهر لك قوة المصلوب. قال. نعم. اشتهى ان اعرف ذلك. فقال القسّيس للحمار. باسم ايشوع المسيح الذى صلبته اليهود مت ايها الحمار. فسقط الحمار وقد فارقته روحه. وصارت بمنزلة الجيفة. فلمّا عاين الغلام ذلك بكى بكآء شديدًا. فقال له القديس القسيس. لا تبك. لكن تكلم على حمارك هذا الميّت بما احببت من كلام موسى والانبيآء. فان نهض الحمار علمنا ان تمسكك بدين اليهوديّة صواب. فاقبل الغلام يدرس ويقرا من التوراة والانبيآء حتى مل من ذلك. والحمار لا يتحرك. ثم دنا القسيس وقال. باسم ايسوع المسيح الذى صلبوه اليهود انهض ايها الحمار. فنهض الحمار ووقف على قوائمه. فلمّا عاين الغلام هذه الاعجوبة وعظم الآية مضى بالحمار الى والدته. فما اقام الا مدة يسيرة حتى توفيت والدته. فواراها ومضى الى القسيس. فصبغه بالمعموذيّة. وطهره من نجاسته اليهوديّة ونقله من المذهب القبيح الى الايمان الصحيح. ثم تغرب الغلام وتخلى وبرز فى الديار واجهد نفسه. فوهب الله له معرفة الخفيّات واظهار الجرائح العظيمة. فكان منها ان قافلة اجتازت به وقد عطش اهلها عطشًا شديدًا اشرفوا فيه على التلف وعلى هلاك دوابّهم. وكان فى بعض احمال القافلة شراب العنب. فلما رأى هذا الفاضل ما حل بالقوم

« Veux-tu que je te montre la puissance de ce crucifié? — Oui, répondit le jeune Épiphane; je désire le connaître. » Le moine interpelle l'âne en ces termes : « Au nom de Jésus-Christ crucifié par les juifs, meurs à l'instant. » L'âne tomba mort : ce ne fut plus qu'un cadavre. Devant ce prodige le jeune homme pleura à chaudes larmes. Le saint lui dit : « Ne pleure pas; mais récite sur ton âne qui vient de mourir les paroles que tu voudras de Moïse ou des prophètes. Si l'âne se lève, vous auriez alors raison de vous attacher à la religion juive. Le jeune homme lut et relut, au point d'arriver à la lassitude, le Pentateuque et les prophètes; l'âne restait toujours sans mouvement. Le moine vint à son tour et dit : « Au nom de Jésus-Christ crucifié par les juifs, âne, lève-toi. » L'animal se leva aussitôt et se tint debout sur ses pattes. Quand l'enfant eut vu ce prodige et ce miracle étonnant, il prit l'âne et revint chez sa mère. Celle-ci mourut quelque temps après. Il l'enterra et se rendit auprès du moine, qui lui conféra le baptême, le purifia de l'impureté juive et le convertit de la fausse croyance à la vraie foi. Puis le jeune homme partit, se retira dans la solitude, mena une vie très mortifiée et apparut enfin dans les monastères. Dieu lui accorda la connaissance des secrets et le privilège d'opérer des miracles. Un jour, une caravane passait près de lui. Elle eut une soif mortelle. Mais elle avait du vin. Le saint vertueux, voyant dans quel embarras se trouvait la caravane, fit le signe de la croix sur les outres qui contenaient le vin qui se transforma aussitôt en eau très pure. La caravane étancha sa soif, désaltéra les bêtes et les chameaux. Mais une seule outre demeura intacte. La caravane la prit avec elle. Et lorsqu'on l'ouvrit, on trouva qu'elle contenait encore du vin. Notre-Seigneur transforma l'eau en vin et son disciple transforma le vin en eau.

فلما ان انتشر خبره وامره اختير للمطرنة. فلما مطرن تضاعفت الايات. وكان فى رعيّته رجل يربى. فكثر ماله من الربآء. فنهاه فلم يلتفت اليه. ولا قبل انكاره ولا سمع موعظته. ثم اشترى بماله حنطة وحملها فى البحر فى عدة سفن. فرسم المطران عليها من مكانه

Lorsque la réputation de ce saint se répandit, on le choisit pour être évêque. Et après sa consécration épiscopale, il multiplia encore davantage les miracles. Parmi ses ouailles, il y avait un usurier dont le commerce prohibé augmentait démesurément la fortune. Le saint lui défendit de prêter à usure. Celui-ci ne fit pas cas de l'exhortation du saint. Quelque temps après, il acheta avec son argent du blé dont il chargea plusieurs vaisseaux. L'évêque fit, de sa résidence, un signe de croix sur les vaisseaux; et ceux-ci firent naufrage à l'instant même. L'Évêque dit alors : « Je remercie Dieu d'avoir bien voulu purifier de l'injustice la maison de ce frère *. » La nouvelle de ce nau- * A p. 26

L'Évêque avait un archidiacre de mauvaise conduite. A plusieurs reprises, il lui avait interdit les actes d'impureté; l'archidiacre ne se rendait pas à la parole de l'évêque. Alors celui-ci lui tint un langage très dur. L'archidiacre complota sa mort; mais sa tentative ne réussit point. Un corbeau se présenta un jour à eux et se mit à croasser. Pour railler l'évêque, l'archidiacre lui demanda l'explication de ce que disait le corbeau. « Il annonce ta mort avant la célébration de la messe, » lui répondit l'évêque. Et en effet, l'archidiacre mourut avant le saint sacrifice. Puis l'évêque se rendit à Jérusalem dont les habitants souffraient d'une grande disette [1]. Il demanda au patriarche de lui prêter les vases qu'il pouvait avoir en or et en argent pour en fabriquer d'autres semblables. Le patriarche les lui prêta. Il les vendit et en destina le prix au soulagement des affamés, des veuves et des orphelins. Comme l'évêque tardait à rendre ces vases au patriarche, celui-ci les lui demanda. Mais il se vit obligé de réitérer sa demande avec beaucoup d'instance; enfin, il excommunia l'évêque. Ce dernier fit sur le patriarche un signe de croix, qui le rendit aveugle. Il ne cessa de pleurer sa faute jusqu'à ce que l'évêque se fût approché de lui; il fit de nouveau un signe de croix, sur ses yeux, qui lui rendit la vue. Puis il dit aux pauvres, auxquels il avait distribué l'argent : « J'ai confiance que le Christ vous enrichira de nouveau; alors, vous rendrez au patriarche ce que je vous ai donné. » Peu de temps après, Dieu les combla, en effet, de biens. Ils remirent alors au patriarche ce qu'ils avaient pris de lui.

Épiphane administra son diocèse pendant trente-cinq ans. Il mena une vie toute spirituelle quoique prisonnier dans un corps charnel. Toutes les fois qu'il baptisait ou qu'il ordonnait prêtre, diacre ou évêque, on voyait le Saint-Esprit planer sur l'œuvre qu'il accomplissait.

Ce saint était originaire de Daïr-Qòni. Sa mère était d'une conduite mauvaise. C'est une chose qui tient du miracle qu'une femme débauchée donnât le jour à un saint! Il en fut ainsi de Jephté par lequel Dieu délivra les Israélites d'Ammon. Dès sa naissance Mar 'Abda fut jeté à l'église par sa mère. Les chrétiens prirent soin de lui et l'élevèrent. Il fit d'excellentes études à l'école de son village. Ordonné prêtre, il bâtit un grand monastère et une école universelle, où l'on se rendit de toutes parts ; car, en ce temps-là, il n'y avait pas d'autre monastère au pays des Araméens (An-Nabat). Cette œuvre prospéra ; une soixantaine d'hommes instruits, entre autres Aḥaï et Iahbalaha les Catholicos, l'illustrèrent. Mar 'Abda devint très célèbre par sa pureté. Il ne cessait de parcourir le pays, de baptiser et de convertir les Araméens au christianisme. Il se rendit ensuite au village de Tella, près du fleuve Ṣerṣer, et quitta les moines du couvent de Ṣliba.

Un jour, les étudiants de son monastère n'avaient plus de pain. Il en prit alors un tout petit, le bénit à l'instar de son maître et les en nourrit, pendant deux jours, ainsi que tous ceux qui s'y trouvaient de passage. Le troisième jour, des fidèles leur envoyèrent du froment.

Mar 'Abda ne goûta pas de mets cuits pendant sept ans; et il mangeait du pain sec et de la cendre. Un jour qu'il traversait Séleucie-Ctésiphon (Al-Madaïn), les mages le saisirent et l'emprisonnèrent. Mais, avec l'aide de Dieu, il sortit de sa prison.

Les Marcionites avaient perverti nombre de chrétiens; ils répandaient parmi eux la magie. Mar 'Abda convertit de nouveau ces derniers. Les élèves de son école pouvaient bien se passer de la nécessité d'aller à Édesse. Les Marcionites cherchaient toujours le moyen de le tuer. Mais Dieu — qu'il est puissant et grand! — déjoua leurs complots.

Le catholicos Ahaï écrivit la vie de ce saint; on pourra donc connaître par elle ses vertus.

LXI. — * Histoire du couvent de Ṣliba.

A l'époque où les églises avaient été détruites en Perse, les chrétiens massacrés, une croix s'éleva de la terre, à l'instar d'un arbre. Cet événement se passa près d'un village connu sous le nom de Tella, situé sur le (fleuve) Ṣerṣer.

Pareil fait arriva naguère au temps de Claude et de sa femme Christa[1]. Ce prodige devait confondre les juifs qui auraient voulu cacher la croix. Mais la croix ressuscita un mort. Les mages en furent très étonnés; mais en vain, ils s'efforcèrent de voiler le miracle. On raconta ce fait à un chrétien, du nom de Ṣliba fils de 'Ousia chef de la région. Celui-ci acheta le terrain et bâtit au lieu même de l'apparition de la croix un temple; les moines y affluèrent de tous côtés. Ṣliba se chargea de l'entretien de cette communauté. Ce temple fut appelé le monastère de Ṣliba[2]. Le miracle fut publié dans tout le pays des Nabatéens.

Le Père Mar 'Abda, fondateur de l'école de Daïr-Qôni, se rendit au lieu du prodige, y opéra des miracles et convertit une foule de personnes. Il enseignait que la croix pouvait bien sortir de la terre et qu'il ne fallait pas en douter. Il appuyait sa parole sur un prodige semblable qui se passa sous Constantin trois cents ans après que les Juifs eurent enfoui la croix; l'image de celle-ci apparut, en effet, au ciel; ce miracle eut lieu à l'époque où le paganisme se propageait, alors que Dioclétien (Douqelṭianus) et Maximien (Maximianus) décimaient les chrétiens. Hélène fit exhumer la croix, de la terre qui exhala, au même instant, une odeur agréable. De plus, au rapport de Daniel, fils de Mariam, une croix lumineuse apparut pendant plusieurs jours, pendant que le * A p. 30 bienheureux Baršaba recevait la couronne du martyre. Une autre croix parut aussi sur le bois où fut crucifié le martyr Nathaniel[1]. Un myrte parut[2] à l'endroit où fut martyrisé Aithalaha (Jabalaha). Les malades du pays de Nouhadra en prenaient des parcelles et recouvraient à l'instant leur santé. Cinq ans après, les mages en eurent connaissance et le coupèrent. C'est ainsi que Dieu fit apparaître de la terre le signe de la croix à cette époque de la domination persane, sous laquelle on massacrait les chrétiens; et cela pour raffermir les cœurs des chrétiens et pour attacher de plus en plus à la foi les fidèles de toutes les provinces de cet empire.

LXII. — Histoire de 'Abdišo' qui batit un couvent près de Ḥira.

Originaire du pays de Maišan, d'un certain village appelé Arphelouna, saint 'Abdišo' se rendit à Daïr-Qôni, près de Mar 'Abda[3]. Il fit à son école des études approfondies. Un jour, il alla du monastère au Tigre pour y puiser de l'eau. Or ce fleuve était loin du monastère; l'on y descendait difficilement. Il trouva là des femmes qui puisaient de l'eau. مر عبدا تاخره. فحدّثه بما جرى. فقال له. ان كنت تفعل كل شي لاجل اليمين فانا احلفك بالمسيح ياعبديشوع ان تقف فى هذا التنور. فرسم ذو الطوبى عبديشوع صليبًا على جسمه وعلى النار ودخل التنور ووقف فيه. وسائر الاخوة ينظرون اليه. وسكن لهيب النار ولم يعلق شيى من ثيابه. فلما كان فى الليل هرب من ذلك الموضع بعقب ما فعله من هذه الاعجوبة. ومضى الى ارضه وبنى هناك ديرًا. واجتمع اليه جماعة اقاموا فيه. وكان اهل بيته وقرابته يقصدونه فى كل وقت. فترك الدير ومضى الى ناحية باكسايا بالقرب من القرية المعروفة ببيب عربى[1]. وكان بهرام فرمانشاه عند اجتيازه به فى ممره من المدائن الى فارس يتعجب من عظم امر هذا الرجل. وكثر من قد اجتمع الى ديره من المتعلمين. ثم فارق الدير ايضًا ومضى الى أرض ميشان وتلمذ بها ريميون ونواحيها.

jarres; ce qu'il fit. De retour au monastère, il fut blâmé par Mar 'Abda d'avoir tardé si longtemps. Il lui raconta ce qui lui était arrivé. Mar 'Abda lui dit : « Si tu dois tout faire à cause de l'adjuration, je t'adjure, 'Abdišo', par le Christ, de te tenir debout, au milieu de ce four. » Le bienheureux 'Abdišo' signa son corps et le feu du signe de la croix, puis entra dans le four et se tint debout, au vu de tous les frères. Les flammes s'apaisèrent aussitôt, et ne consumèrent rien de ses vêtements. A la suite de ce miracle, il s'enfuit de cet endroit pendant la nuit et se dirigea vers son pays natal. Il y bâtit un monastère où se réunit une foule de personnes. Sa famille et ses parents venaient chez lui à tout instant. Il abandonna, pour ce motif, le monastère et s'en alla au pays de Baksaya, près du village de Beit 'Arby (?). Bahram Farmanšah, revenant de Séleucie-Ctésiphon, passait par ce village et était frappé de la considération dont jouissait cet homme et du grand nombre des disciples réunis autour de lui. Il abandonna encore ce monastère et se retira dans le pays de Maišan où il convertit Rimioun et ses environs.

* Sa réputation arriva jusqu'au catholicos Toumarṣa qui le consacra évêque de Deir Mehraq [1]. Les habitants de cette province étaient rebelles : 'Abdišo' les ramena au droit chemin par sa douceur et sa bonne administration. Puis il fut maltraité par eux. Il leur laissa sa chape et son bâton et partit la nuit pour une île de Yamama et de Baḥrein. Il y mena une vie solitaire et baptisa * A p. 31

Le démon lui dit alors : « Tu m'as chassé de cet endroit ; où veux-tu donc que je m'en aille? — Porte cette pierre, lui répondit le bienheureux, et va au désert des fils d'Ismaël. » Le démon exécuta cet ordre et revint dire au saint : « J'ai porté la pierre à l'endroit que tu m'as indiqué, je l'ai mise à trois milles de la ville de Ḥira qui se trouve à l'entrée du désert. » ʿAbdisoʿ lui dit : « Tu ne quitteras pas cette île jusqu'à ce que j'y aille pour constater la vérité de ta parole. » En cette nuit même, il eut une vision pour se rendre à l'endroit où la pierre avait été mise et y bâtir un monastère. Le saint partit de l'île appelée aujourd'hui Ramath qui se trouve à dix-huit parasanges d'Obelah, et se dirigea vers Ḥira où il construisit un monastère. Sa réputation se répandit au loin et l'on se mit à affluer près de lui. Quant au démon, il resta emprisonné dans l'île. Les hommes de ces régions l'entendaient crier : « Seigneur, il ne viendra donc pas? Jusqu'à quand dois-je l'attendre ici? » Puis le saint retourna au monastère fondé par lui à Maisan afin de baptiser ses enfants. Là il rendit son âme.

LXIII. — Histoire de Qayoma, le treizième catholicos.

A la mort du Catholicos Toumarṣa, Qayoma lui succéda l'année neuvième de Bahrâm Farmanšah [1]. C'était un homme avancé en âge. Malgré sa vieillesse et la faiblesse de son corps, il ne cessa d'administrer les affaires de ses ouailles jusqu'à l'avènement de Jazdgerd l'impie. Il choisit alors Isaac (Isḥaq), parent de Toumarṣa, pour être catholicos à sa place. Et, de concert avec les Pères et les fidèles, il lui laissa l'administration.

Qayoma garda sa cellule et dit : « Comme Dieu rendit à ses sujets la tranquillité et éloigna d'eux l'exil et la persécution, il faut confier la direction de leurs affaires à un homme peu âgé, capable de les diriger et de les gouverner comme il convient. » Puis Qayoma mourut la troisième année de Jazdgerd [2].

L'évêque Épiphane était d'origine juive[1]. Mais Dieu le choisit comme il avait choisi Paul et fit éclater autour de lui une lumière éblouissante. Il reçut le baptême à l'âge de dix-sept ans et embrassa la vie monastique. A l'âge de soixante ans, il fut élu évêque et pasteur des brebis du Christ. Il composa des traités, des homélies sur le jeûne et la prière. Il vécut cent quinze ans. Il avait un compagnon, du nom de Naṭira[2], disciple du Père Sawena[3], qui habitait le Mont Sinaï. Timothée, évêque d'Alexandrie, consacra Naṭira évêque d'une ville de l'Égypte, du nom d'Assuriḥous[4]. Lorsqu'il vivait encore dans la solitude, Naṭira prenait un peu soin de son corps. Mais, une fois évêque, il mena une vie plus austère et plus mortifiée Son disciple lui en demanda la raison. « Quand j'étais au désert, lui répondit-il, je prenais soin de mon corps pour qu'il ne fût pas atteint de la maladie; mais maintenant que je suis retourné au monde, j'ai besoin de me mortifier et d'affaiblir mon corps afin qu'il ne tombe pas dans les pièges et les nombreuses tentations. » Puis, ce saint se

Un jour qu'il était chez lui, il entendit une voix du ciel, qui disait : « Arsène, fuis les hommes et tu vivras[1]. » Il abandonna alors tout ce qu'il possédait, se retira dans le désert de l'Égypte et embrassa la vie monastique. Sa figure était belle et sa barbe bien longue. Lorsqu'il entrait à l'église, il se plaçait derrière un pilier pour se dérober aux regards des fidèles[2]. Le samedi, au soir, il se tenait debout à l'église, ayant le dos tourné au soleil et les mains vers le ciel : il gardait cette attitude, sans mouvoir ses membres, jusqu'au dimanche[3]. A cause de la fatigue, son corps se dessécha sur ses os ; les cils de ses paupières tombèrent ; mais son visage, semblable à celui des anges, brillait d'un vif éclat[4]. Enfin, il fut frappé d'une maladie dans le désert d'Égypte et n'eut plus la force de faire quoi que ce soit[5]. Notre-Seigneur lui accorda, de son ineffable bonté, la grâce de quitter ce monde éphémère et d'occuper une des meilleures places dans le monde à venir. Il vécut cent douze ans, dont quarante sur le trône[6], soixante à travers le désert et les montagnes d'Égypte, dix aux environs d'Alexandrie et deux au lieu appelé Troa où il mourut[7]. Ce Père était bon, vertueux, savant, miséricordieux, thaumaturge, appliqué au jeûne et à la prière. Il géra fort bien les affaires de son peuple. Arcadius, empereur des Romains, ayant eu connaissance de la persécution déchaînée en Perse contre les chrétiens, s'en attrista et écrivit à Jazdgerd une lettre dans laquelle il lui disait : « Si Dieu a remis entre nos mains le pouvoir royal, ce n'est pas afin de nous procurer le bien-être personnel, mais afin de gouverner nos sujets avec justice, de dompter l'oppresseur et de rétribuer les bienfaisants, chacun selon son mérite. Tu n'adores pas Dieu! pourtant il t'a accordé une part assez large du royaume terrestre; il t'a soumis sa créature; il t'a élevé au trône! Il n'est donc pas juste qu'on maltraite ainsi les chrétiens de ton empire, qu'on les pille et qu'on les massacre. S'il est vrai que cela arrive, la plupart du temps, à ton insu, il n'en est pas moins vrai que les tiens le font toujours dans le but de les pressurer et de leur enlever ce qu'ils possèdent. Sache que cela attire sur toi la colère divine et la haine des hommes. En effet, quand les hommes viennent à savoir ce qui arrive à leurs semblables, ils le désapprouvent et le trouvent monstrueux. Ces gens-là auraient plus de profit, s'ils cherchaient à poursuivre l'ennemi et à introduire la réforme dans La lettre fut portée à Jazdgerd, alors malade, par Marouta, évêque de Maiferqat (Miapherqin), envoyé auprès de lui, par l'empereur, dans le dessein aussi de le soigner. A son arrivée chez lui, Jazdgerd éprouva une grande joie, accéda à sa demande et lui envoya des présents. La persécution prit fin et la paix fut rendue aux chrétiens. Jazdgerd adressa ensuite au catholicos Isaac des paroles capables de le rassurer et de calmer son cœur agité.

Isaac (Isḥaq) profita de la présence de Marouta pour convoquer un concile afin de décréter les canons nécessaires à l'administration de l'Église orientale, comme cela eut lieu souvent en Occident. Marouta présenta à Jazdgerd la lettre des Pères occidentaux, dans laquelle ils le priaient de réunir les évêques et les métropolitains à Séleucie-Ctésiphon (Al-Madaïn). Jazdgerd acquiesça à cette demande et se réjouit de la conclusion de cet accord entre les deux empires. Puis il écrivit aux siens et leur enjoignit d'envoyer à Séleucie (Al-Madaïn) les évêques de leurs provinces. Et la onzième année de son règne [1], à Noël [2], quarante métropolitains et évêques se réunirent à Séleucie. Alors on donna lecture de la lettre des Pères occidentaux; ils n'hésitèrent pas à l'accepter. Puis, en présence de ces Pères, Isaac et Marouta rédigèrent vingt-deux canons pour les besoins de l'Église. Et tous, de plein gré, donnè-

LXVII. — Histoire de Jean (Youanis) Chrysostome[1].

Nectaire (Nouphatrus) était resté dix-sept ans sur le siège patriarcal de Constantinople. Après sa mort, Arcadius fit venir d'Antioche Jean surnommé « la bouche d'or » à cause de son éloquence et l'éleva au patriarcat de Constantinople. Il était parent de Théodore l'interprète. Il embrassa la vie cénobitique dans un monastère, près d'Antioche, où se trouvaient Flavien (Flauianous) et Diodore (Diodourous) l'exégète.

Il fit ses études auprès de Diodore et de Libanius le philosophe. Puis il habita une caverne durant quatre ans. Il composa deux volumes de commentaires sur Matthieu et deux autres sur Jean ainsi qu'une explication des Épîtres pauliniennes. Il composa ces commentaires d'une façon didactique. A la fin de tous ses traités, il donnait des exhortations. Il composa des homélies sur les fêtes et le sacerdoce; il en écrivit d'autres pleines de remontrances adressées aux hérétiques. Il était aussi zélé que le prophète Élie. Il s'attira l'inimitié et la haine de l'impératrice Eudoxie, parce qu'il l'avait blâmée d'a-

Théophile d'Alexandrie et son neveu Cyrille, plus tard successeur de son oncle, portèrent envie à Chrysostome et se proposèrent de l'attaquer. Ils réunirent vingt-neuf évêques qui l'accusèrent de s'appuyer sur les écrits d'Origène, par la raison qu'il les expliquait et les lisait constamment, et décidèrent l'empereur à l'exiler. Celui-ci le relégua, en effet, dans la Cappadoce. Mais cela causa un grand tumulte parmi le peuple. L'empereur fut obligé de le rappeler de son exil. Chrysostome ne cessait pas de reprendre l'impératrice qu'il comparait à Hérodiade (Hiroudia). Elle eut connaissance des reproches adressés contre elle ; elle s'en plaignit à Théophile et à d'autres évêques, ennemis de Jean. Ceux-ci le déposèrent et l'excommunièrent. Épiphane (Aphiqus), évêque de Chypre, signa son excommunication. On le condamna ensuite et on l'envoya dans le Pont (Phetamaus). Son patriarcat avait duré six ans[1]. Depuis son entrée dans le sein de la vie religieuse, Jean ne jura pas et ne goûta jamais le vin. Il fit contre Épiphane cette imprécation, qu'il n'arrivât pas vivant à sa ville. Celui-ci en fit une autre, que Jean ne revînt plus de son exil. Cela se réalisa à la lettre. Épiphane mourut en route pour Chypre.

LXVIII. — Histoire de Jahbalaha le moine, élu catholicos[1].

A l'école de Mar 'Abda se trouvait un homme vertueux, du nom de Jahbalaha qui signifie « don de Dieu ». Il fit d'excellentes études et surpassa tous ses condisciples. Près du monastère de Mar Ézéchiel le prophète se trouvait un village appelé Daskart d'Abišo, dont les habitants avaient été convertis par le savant et vertueux Mar 'Abda. Ils prièrent ce dernier de leur envoyer un homme capable de leur apprendre ce dont ils auraient besoin. Mar 'Abda confia cette mission au bienheureux Jahbalaha, qui se rendit près d'eux et y construisit un grand monastère; mais il en éprouva bientôt du dégoût, et, préférant la solitude et la vie retirée, il éleva, à peu de distance de ce pays, un autre monastère sur les bords du Tigre. Les frères entendirent parler de lui. Et l'on commença à affluer près de lui de tous côtés. Voyant le nombre des frères augmenter considérablement, il les divisa en trois groupes; il ordonna à chacun d'eux de psalmodier, pendant une heure, les sept heures canoniques, et de ne se retirer qu'après avoir terminé la psalmodie. Le groupe suivant devait succéder au premier afin que la prière ne fût jamais interrompue; et cela pour imiter les anges. Et une fois le premier groupe con-

Puis ils retournaient à la prière; après quoi un autre groupe leur succédait, toujours dans le même ordre. L'abbé Mar 'Abda avait soin de visiter les frères aux heures indiquées et de surveiller leurs exercices.

Vers cette époque la pluie fit défaut. Les habitants de l'endroit sollicitèrent la prière de Jahbalaha. Celui-ci fit des rogations, et la pluie descendit sur la terre. En passant par là pour se rendre en Perse, Jazdgerd était confondu d'y voir une foule si nombreuse de personnes.

On comptait parmi les philosophes et les docteurs de ce temps-là, qui se trouvaient à Rome, à Chypre et à Alexandrie, Namesius (?) le philosophe. Il professait la doctrine des anciens philosophes. Mais il reçut le baptême de la main d'Athanase (Athanasius), patriarche d'Alexandrie, et à la science philosophique il joignit celle de l'Évangile. Il combattit Valens (Walis) et Claude (Caladis), son général. Il les fit prêter serment de ne rien faire (?). Mais ils déchaînèrent contre lui une tempête de maux qu'il supporta avec patience. Puis il fut exilé au désert d'Awasa[2], où fut exilé Mar Nestorius. Il y séjourna pendant quatre ans; puis il revint chez lui. Il y avait à Édesse Mar Aba qui Après Jean (Youanis), le siège de Constantinople fut occupé par Arsace, frère de Nectaire (Saqṭus), qui n'y passa que quatorze mois et mourut. Atticus qui était bien orthodoxe lui succéda. Il rétablit le nom de Jean (Youanis) dans les diptyques des Pères. Cyrille condamna cet acte, écrivit à Atticus pour le blâmer et lui demander de rayer des diptyques le nom de Chrysostome. Atticus s'y refusa. Avant sa mort, Atticus envoya à Cléophas, prêtre de Nicée, 300 pièces de monnaie d'or pour être distribuées aux pauvres. Puis il mourut le dix octobre après un pontificat de vingt et un ans.

A la mort d'Isaac, Marouta de Maiferqaṭ choisit à sa place, comme catholicos, avec le consentement des Pères et de Jazdgerd, Aḥaï, disciple de Mar ʿAbda. Avant son élection au catholicat, son maître l'avait établi supérieur du monastère de ses écoliers. Élevé au pontificat, il jouissait d'une grande faveur auprès de Jazdgerd. Peu de temps après son élévation au catholicat, Jazdgerd l'envoya en Perse à cause des marchandises et des perles transportées sur des navires, des pays de l'Inde et de la Chine, et que Nahrouz, fils de son frère Sapor, gouverneur de Perse, prétendait avoir été volées par les pirates, — pour que le catholicos se rendît compte de la véracité de ces allégations, et lui en fît son rapport. Il consigna dans un écrit les traditions qu'il recueillit sur les martyrs de ces régions et revint auprès de Jazdgerd auquel il raconta ce qu'il avait vu. Il eut plus de crédit auprès du roi et obtint de celui-ci une autorité considérable dans l'empire. Il demanda alors à tous les Pères d'incendier toute maison entachée de sorcellerie ou renfermant des instruments de magie; car les chrétiens s'étaient déjà mêlés à la foule des Marcionites et des Manichéens et participaient déjà à leurs œuvres. Puis il consigna dans un volume les récits des martyrs d'Orient. Daniel, fils de Mariam, fit de même dans son histoire ecclésiastique. Il écrivit aussi la vie de son maître, Mar 'Abda. Son catholicat avait duré quatre ans, sept mois et quelques jours. Que Dieu donne à son âme le repos éternel!

Puis Honorius mourut en 734[2], âgé de trente-huit ans. Il avait régné vingt-huit ans dont deux avec son père et 26 après sa mort. L'empire fut alors gouverné par Théodose. Du vivant de sa mère, il demeura orthodoxe et ne dévia point du droit chemin. En cette même année, mourut Théophile patriarche d'Alexandrie, qui avait excommunié Jean Chrysostome. Son neveu Cyrille lui succéda. Puis la quatrième année du catholicat de Jahbalaha, Jazdgerd remercia Théodose au sujet de la députation d'Acace auprès de lui. Il lui envoya de sa part, à titre d'ambassadeur, Jahbalaha, portant une lettre et des présents magnifiques. Il écrivit à ses amis de se mettre au service de Jahbalaha et de le combler d'honneurs durant son voyage. A son arrivée auprès de Théodose, le catholicos lui remit la lettre du Roi et l'assura de l'orthodoxie de l'Église persane, de l'unité de sa doctrine et de l'abandon qu'elle faisait des deux substances. Théodose admira l'intelligence de Jahbalaha, lui offrit des présents, une somme d'argent et d'autres cadeaux qui ne se trouvaient guère en Perse, et il accorda à Jazdgerd tout ce qu'il demandait. De retour à son siège, Jahbalaha restaura l'église de Séleucie (Al-Madaïn) et en bâtit d'autres avec les dons que lui avait faits Théodose. Mais Jazdgerd abandonna bientôt sa politique de tolérance et de bienveillance touchant les chrétiens. Son général Sapor les persécuta et détruisit leurs églises. Le mal de tête reprit aussitôt Jazdgerd; vainement il se soigna : la médecine ne lui apporta aucun soulagement. Il manda enfin Jahbalaha auprès de lui et implora sa guérison. La prière du saint lui rendit la santé. Il cessa alors d'abattre les églises et d'exiler les chrétiens. Mais Jahbalaha demandait toujours à Notre-Seigneur — que son nom soit adoré — qu'il ne revît pas l'effusion de sang des fidèles, et de le faire mourir avant. Sa prière fut exaucée et il mourut. Que ses prières soient avec nous! Son catholicat avait duré cinq ans. Après sa mort, Jazdgerd recommença à détruire les églises, à condamner les chrétiens à l'exil et à déchaîner une effroyable tempête de maux contre eux. Plusieurs furent massacrés; citons Rabban 'Abda, évêque de la Susiane (Al-Ahwaz), homme vertueux et savant. La cause de cette persécution était celle-ci : un certain prêtre du nom d'Osée[1] avait détruit en Susiane le pyrée voisin de l'église et avait éteint le feu, parce que les chrétiens éprouvaient des dommages de la part des gardiens de ce temple. Jazdgerd en fut irrité et ordonna de démolir les églises. Les choses restèrent ainsi jusqu'au jour où Isaac, patrice d'Arménie, lui parla en faveur des chrétiens; c'était grâce à son intervention que les Arméniens s'étaient soumis à Jazdgerd. Jazdgerd fit arrêter la persécution et apaisa leurs craintes. Dieu est notre aide.

Les chrétiens avaient besoin d'élire un successeur à Jahbalaha. Ma'na, métropolitain de Perse, savait le persan et le syriaque. Il avait fait ses études à Édesse et traduit plusieurs livres du syriaque en persan. Jazdgerd le con-naissait, car il avait été introduit auprès de lui avec Jahbalaha. Les chrétiens sollicitèrent, pour l'élection de Ma'na, l'intervention de Miršabur[1], chef de la milice, auprès de Jazdgerd; pour atteindre ce but, ils lui offrirent une somme d'argent. Miršabur les aida; il demanda une audience au Roi et lui dit : « Ma'na est un homme persan, capable de te servir. Permets qu'il soit élu catholicos. » Les chrétiens, heureux de ce résultat, espéraient voir le rétablissement des églises et la fin de la persécution. Mais leur espérance, selon la parole du prophète Isaïe, fut bientôt déçue. En effet, un jour que Ma'na se présentait devant Jazdgerd, accompagné de quelques Pères, le roi les fixa, les yeux courroucés. Ils comprirent qu'il machinait encore un prétexte de les persécuter; prétexte qu'il trouva dans la conduite du prêtre Osée dont nous avons parlé plus haut. Puis le roi ajouta : « César est le maître absolu de son royaume; il y fait ses volontés; moi aussi, je suis maître de mon royaume; j'y ferai ce que je voudrai. » A deux reprises le roi répéta ces paroles. Un prêtre de Séleucie (Al-Madaïn), du nom de Narsaï, répondit alors pour le catholicos en disant au roi : « Sire, César n'a de pouvoir dans son royaume que pour exiger le paiement des impôts et des tributs * et pour massacrer les * A p. 37 ennemis; mais il n'a pas le pouvoir d'exiger de ses sujets l'abandon de leur religion. En effet, malgré le grand nombre des juifs, des païens et des hérétiques de son empire, il ne les oblige pas cependant à changer de croyance. » Le roi fut courroucé de ces paroles; et ceux qui étaient en séance devant lui furent d'avis que Narsaï méritait la mort, parce qu'il avait répondu au roi. ١٣ خبر تنصر اهل نجران.

catholicos dit alors : « Narsaï n'a fait que répondre à la parole du roi; il n'a rien dit qui puisse lui mériter la mort. » Jazdgerd ordonna la décapitation du prêtre s'il ne reniait pas le christianisme; il ordonna aussi de déchirer les vêtements du catholicos, de l'exiler en Perse et de ne plus l'appeler de ce nom ni publiquement, ni même dans l'intimité. Sur ces entrefaites, Osée de Nisibe (Naṣibin) et Bâṭâ de Lâsom[1] tentèrent de plaider leur cause. On les empêcha, puis on les fit sortir. Les mages travaillèrent avec ardeur à faire du prêtre Narsaï une recrue pour leur religion. Celui-ci resta inébranlable dans sa foi. Il fut décapité. Les fidèles l'ensevelirent dans la grande église de Séleucie.

Ma'na se rendit en Perse. Jazdgerd, apprenant qu'il administrait de là son diocèse, ne put le tolérer et ordonna de le jeter en prison. Il fut emprisonné un certain temps; mais quelques chefs le délivrèrent. Puis on interdit de l'appeler catholicos de son vivant et même après sa mort. Il mourut en Perse. Qu'il soit agréé de Dieu!

١٤ خبر موت يزدجرد وتقلد ابنه مكانه.

كان المجوس يبغضون يزدجرد لما عاملهم به فى وقت تقلده ووضعه من روسآئهم وميله الى النصارى. واطلاقه بنآء البيع ويسخروا به دائمًا ويلعنونه فى بيوت النيران. وكانت صلاة الآبآء فى ايّامه ودعآؤهم له تمنع عنه وتدفع الشيطان كما وعد سيدنا المسيح تلاميذه. فلما

Il y reçut le baptême et y resta un certain temps. De là, il revint au pays natal et engagea ses compatriotes à partager ses convictions religieuses. Il baptisa les membres de sa famille ainsi que d'autres personnes de son pays et des régions avoisinantes. Puis, aidé de quelques-uns d'entre eux, il convertit au christianisme le territoire de Ḥamir et ses alentours voisins de l'Abyssinie. Plus tard, un roi juif, appelé Masrouq, régna sur ces pays. Il était né d'une mère juive emmenée captive de Nisibe (Naṣibin), achetée par un roi du Yémen. Elle apprit à son enfant la religion juive. Lorsqu'il monta sur le trône de son père, il massacra beaucoup de chrétiens. Barsahdé raconte tout cela[1] dans son histoire.

LXXIV. — Histoire de la mort de Jazdgerd et de l'avènement au trône de son fils.

Les mages détestaient Jazdgerd, parce qu'il les maltraita lors de son avènement, diminua le pouvoir de leurs chefs et se montra favorable aux chrétiens, permettant à ces derniers de construire des églises. Ils se moquaient de lui et le maudissaient dans les pyrées. Mais les prières des Pères, ses contemporains, adressées à Dieu pour lui, le protégeaient contre le démon, selon la promesse faite par le Christ, Notre-Seigneur, à ses apôtres. Mais quand Jahbalaha mourut et que Maʿna fut exilé, le démon prit possession de Jazdgerd et réalisa ce qu'il cherchait à faire de lui. Le roi souffrit de nouveau, avec plus d'intensité, du mal de tête; il en mourut. Cette mort causa aux mages une grande joie. Il avait régné vingt et un ans et neuf mois. Après lui, son fils Bahràm (Warhàràn) monta sur le trône. Les mages craignaient que le nouveau roi ne marchât sur les traces de son père. Mais il était très passionné pour le jeu et les femmes. Il détruisit les églises, déterra les os des martyrs, qui y étaient ensevelis, et les jeta à l'eau. Sur le conseil du chef de l'armée de son père, il condamna les chrétiens à la prison. Il s'empara des ornements sacrés que Jahbalaha avait emportés des pays des Romains, rompit l'accord avec ces derniers et se montra bienveillant à l'égard des mages.

Jacques lut la lettre, se repentit de sa faute et renonça au magisme. La nouvelle fut portée à la connaissance de Bahrâm (Warhârân) qui le manda et lui dit : « Es-tu chrétien? » — « Oui, répondit Jacques, et je l'avoue hautement. » Irrité, le monarque dit ensuite : « N'as-tu pas reçu de mon père des dons et des cadeaux à cause de ta conversion au magisme? » Et Jacques de répondre aussitôt : « N'insiste pas davantage; ne cherche pas à m'inspirer de la frayeur. La pierre, une fois sortie de la fronde, n'y retourne plus. Et moi, je vous le déclare, je ne renierai plus le christianisme pour la magie. » Les mages qui étaient présents le condamnèrent à mort. Mais le monarque, espérant le ramener encore au magisme par la crainte des tourments, ordonna de couper ses membres l'un après l'autre. Le saint n'en fut pas troublé. Chaque fois qu'on lui coupait un membre, il en remerciait Dieu. Et, n'ayant plus que la tête, la poitrine et le ventre, il s'appliqua la parole du prophète David : « Je sors mon âme de sa prison pour te rendre grâce et célébrer tes louanges. » Enfin, il fut décapité, un vendredi du mois de novembre, 734 d'Alexandre [1].

LXXVI. — Histoire de 'Aqbalaha, évêque de Beit Garmaï [1].

Le père de ce saint était d'une de ces nobles familles, amies de Sapor, roi de Perse. Or ce roi lui demanda d'adorer le soleil. Il y consentit. Mais son fils 'Aqbalaha s'y refusa; il embrassa la vie monastique à l'âge de quinze ans; il renonça au monde et à ses séductions. Puis on lui conféra la prêtrise. Il baptisa les habitants d'un village de Beit Garmaï, qui appartenait autrefois à son père. Il guérit d'une maladie la fille de Bahrâm et pria ce dernier de ne plus persécuter les chrétiens. Le roi accueillit favorablement sa demande. Plus tard, mis en fuite par les Romains, le roi revient sur ce qu'il avait promis à l'Évêque et recommença à massacrer les saints. AVERTISSEMENT

Nous publions le Synaxaire Arménien, Haïsmavourk, Յայսմաւուրք, de Ter Israel Տէր Իսրայէլ, d'après le manuscrit bien connu de la Bibliothèque Nationale de Paris que nous désignons par la lettre A. Nous y ajoutons les variantes et les autres rédactions de l'édition officielle de Constantinople de 1834[1]. Nous les avons prises sur un exemplaire mis à notre disposition par les RR. PP. Bollandistes et que nous désignons par la lettre B.

M. F. Macler, dans son catalogue des manuscrits arméniens[2], donne la description suivante du manuscrit de Paris :

Ms. 180. — Ménologe (Յայսմաւուրք) de Ter Israel. Texte commençant au 1er de Navaçart (11 août) et contenant les vies des saints pour tous les jours de l'année ; (parmi les saints occidentaux, on mentionne saint Thomas de Cantorbéry).

La date (fol. 339) est effacée ; elle figure dans une note en italien, au commencement du volume ; le ménologe a été copié en 765 de l'ère arménienne (= 1316 de J.-C), par le scribe Siméon, en Crimée, pour le baron Sahab, fils de Djanter. Ce Ms. fut vendu (fol. 137 v°) en 1394, par le prêtre Tiratur, fils de Kiriakos, au prêtre Grégoire, fils de Thoros, qui a ajouté des notes.

Deux mains. Orthographe fautive en plusieurs endroits. Ornements. Tables de concordance au commencement, sur parchemin.

XIVe siècle ; écriture bolorgir ; papier ; 339 feuillets, à deux colonnes ; 350 sur 250 millimètres ; reliure maroquin rouge, aux armes du roi.

Les Arméniens ont commencé par composer et traduire des vies de saints très développées, qu'ils ont condensées plus tard, à plusieurs reprises, pour être lues au commencement de l'office du soir. Ces résumés liturgiques constituent le synaxaire dont l'histoire est exposée tout au long dans la préface de l'édition de 1834. Nous croyons utile d'ajouter ici la traduction de la partie historique de cette préface :

« Nos zélés traducteurs du ve siècle, après avoir accompli maintes œuvres utiles pour notre nation, qui la montrèrent très avancée dans toute sagesse spirituelle et dans les sciences, entreprirent la traduction des vies de nombreux saints, ainsi que l'atteste le style élevé et sublime de la rédaction. Ce fut ensuite Gagik Vardapet (Գագիկ Վարդապետ) du couvent d'Atom, au IXe siècle, qui traduisit du grec nombre de vies de saints. Son ouvrage fut intitulé Atomagir, Ատոմագիր, Livre d'Atom.

« Après lui, Ter Israel (Տէր Իսրայէլ), homme érudit, qui florissait aux jours de Vanakan Vardapet (Վանական Վարդապետ), au commencement du XIIIe siècle, fit un abrégé des vies des saints, des histoires des martyrs et des homélies, qui se trouvaient au complet dans le Tcharentir, et les distribua selon chaque jour du mois, et il ajouta, ainsi qu'il sied de le dire, et en les faisant concorder, des extraits de la sainte Bible et des traditions anciennes, concernant la vie des saints patriarches, des prophètes et des apôtres.

« Cet ouvrage fut intitulé Haïsmavourk, Յայսմաւուրք, ou Synaxaire. Il commença son œuvre par le premier jour de Septembre, car, disait-il, les sages Romains (Grecs) considèrent ce jour comme le premier de l'année.

« Par la suite, Kirakos Vardapet, l'Oriental (Կիրակոս Վարդապետ Արեւելցի), au XVe siècle, ayant pour guide Ter Israel, compila un nouveau synaxaire.

« Après lui, Grigor Vardapet Khlatetsi (Գրիգոր Վարդ. Խլաթեցի), le surnommé Tsérents (Ծերենց), également au XVe siècle, ayant réuni les synaxaires de Ter Israel et de Kirakos Vardapet, y ajouta, sans aucun choix, des légendes douteuses et d'aucune utilité, et à leur aide, compila un nouveau synaxaire, auquel les copistes ultérieurs ajoutèrent des choses peu convenables, chacun selon son caprice, détériorant de la sorte le précieux livre que Ter Israel avait fidèlement abrégé du Tcharentir.

« Ce texte altéré du synaxaire de Khlatetsi eut postérieurement deux éditions, à Constantinople[1], avec en plus de nombreuses fautes d'impression, et au lieu des excellents synaxaires de Ter Israel et de Kirakos Vardapet, c'est celui-là qui fut introduit imprudemment dans les églises et dont la lecture y était donnée jusqu'à nos jours.

« Toutefois, à raison des multiples altérations qu'il contenait, il fut négligé non seulement par la sage critique, mais aussi par la communauté en général.

« Lorsque, par ordre impérial, le Catholicos de la Maison de Cilicie (Տանն Կիլիկիոյ), Ter Kirakos, vint à Constantinople et qu'on apprit de lui qu'il se trouvait au catholicat de Sis un bon exemplaire du synaxaire de Ter Israel, on le pria respectueusement de vouloir bien le prêter pour la publication. A son retour au siège patriarcal, il l'envoya sans retard. Le texte était sur parchemin, bolorgir, copié aux jours du pieux roi d'Arménie Ochine et du catholicos Constantin. Il y manquait quelques feuillets au commencement et à la fin. La préface n'était pas complète, car il y manquait la fin, d'où la difficulté d'en préciser la date.

1. En 1706 et 1730.

« Toutefois comme Ochine avait été sacré roi l'an du Seigneur 1308 et qu'il avait régné douze années, et que les mémoires se trouvant à la fin de chaque récit attestaient qu'il avait été récemment sacré roi et que son fils aîné Léon était encore tout jeune, il est possible d'avancer que le manuscrit avait été copié la première ou la deuxième année de son règne, c'est-à-dire l'an 1309. Car il est dit, au 4 septembre, dans un mémoire : Par leur intercession, Dieu le Christ, aie pitié du possesseur de ce volume, notre pieux roi Ochine, et de son tendre fils Léon et de ses parents, et du grand pécheur le copiste et secrétaire Grigor et de l'excellent prêtre et aumônier du roi, Thoros.

« Au 8 septembre, on lit : Christ, fortifie notre pieux roi Ochine, récemment sacré, et son tendre fils Léon. De semblables mémoires se trouvent en plusieurs endroits du volume.

« Aussi, après minutieux examen et avec le consentement unanime du conseil national, composé d'ecclésiastiques et de laïques, de LL. Grandeurs Messeigneurs les évêques, de sages vardapeds, d'excellents prètres, ainsi que de nobles et patriotes amiras, des chefs de corporations d'artisans, fut-il décidé et ordonné que dorénavant la lecture du synaxaire de Khlatetsi, défectueux à plusieurs égards, serait supprimée dans toutes les églises et couvents de la nation; et pour que la bonne coutume établie par nos bienheureux ancêtres fût conservée intacte, qu'en son lieu et place, lecture fût donnée du présent synaxaire.

« Aussi, en cours de l'impression de cet ouvrage, avons-nous eu soin de suivre les plus anciennes et meilleures copies des synaxaires de la Cilicie, tout en conservant intact le fond historique, et quant aux vies des saints et aux faits historiques de l'Arménie postérieurs à l'époque de l'auteur, et dont nous avons fait un choix pour compléter l'ouvrage, ces faits, nous les avons placés aux jours du mois qui leur correspondaient.

« Nous avons intercalé dans l'ordre des lectures la commémoration de la mort de certains rois et princes royaux des Roubéniens, qui se trouvaient marqués d'un astérisque, au bas de notre texte. Nous y avons également ajouté deux récits de martyrs, celui du bienheureux Nicolas de Brousse et de sainte Varvaré de Karine et leurs compagnons de martyre, que nous avons trouvés confirmés par des témoins oculaires. »

pouvait trouver un manuscrit de Ter Israel, il s'en trouvait au moins un autre, contemporain, qui est venu de Crimée jusqu'à la Bibliothèque Nationale. Nous le reproduisons tel quel [1]. Il y manque quelques feuillets auxquels nous avons suppléé par le texte imprimé en 1834. Nous présentons donc à nos lecteurs le texte pur du célèbre synaxaire de Ter Israel, compilé au XIIIe siècle directement sur les Tcharentirs qui sont très probablement du XIe.

1. Pour la transcription des noms propres nous avons suivi la méthode adoptée par le monde savant, selon le conseil qu'a bien voulu nous donner M. A. Meillet, professeur au Collège de France; toutefois il nous a fait remarquer que comme il s'agit d'un ouvrage du XIIIe siècle, certains noms historiques et géographiques de l'Arménie de cette époque auraient pu être transcrits d'après la prononciation des Arméniens de la Turquie. Dans les cas les plus importants nous indiquerons en note cette seconde prononciation.

Note des éditeurs. — S. A. R. le prince Max de Saxe a bien voulu revoir les dernières épreuves de ce fascicule. C'est d'ailleurs son généreux concours qui nous permet de publier des textes arméniens. Nous tenons à le remercier ici de nous aider dans nos efforts pour faire connaître les littératures chrétiennes orientales.

1er NAVASARD, 11 Août.

Fête de Jean le Précurseur du Christ, établie par saint Grégoire l'Illuminateur de la Grande Arménie.

Lorsque saint Grégoire [Grigor] illumina le pays d'Arménie de la science du Seigneur et que les gens abandonnèrent l'erreur des idoles et leur vain culte, le très puissant et brave roi d'Arménie, Tiridate [Terdat], l'envoya à Césarée de Cappadoce pour être sacré catholicos de toute l'Arménie. L'archevêque de Césarée, Léonce [Lévondios], convoqua tous les évêques de sa juridiction et, d'après les canons apostoliques, lui conféra l'honneur apostolique. Il lui remit les restes de Jean le Précurseur qui s'y trouvaient, et que l'évêque de * Césarée, Firmilien [Firmilianos], avait apportés d'Éphèse, où ils avaient été transportés par Jean l'évangéliste. Il lui remit également les restes de l'évêque Athénogènes [Athanaginès]. * A fol. 4 r° b.

Saint Grégoire, en revenant, avec les princes qui l'accompagnaient, dans la province de Taron, voulut remonter le vallon pour y détruire, au haut de la colline, les statues de Vahagn ; les mulets blancs du char dans lequel se trouvaient les restes des saints Jean et Athénogènes s'arrêtèrent, ne pouvant plus avancer. L'ange du Seigneur apparut alors à saint Grégoire et lui dit : Il a plu au Seigneur que ces saints demeurassent ici. Et saint Grégoire construisit en cet endroit une grande et belle église au nom du saint Précurseur du Christ Jean-Baptiste et y déposa ses restes. C'est en ce lieu que s'accomplirent et s'accomplissent jusqu'aujourd'hui beaucoup de guérisons pour ceux qui y ont recours avec foi à l'intercession du saint Précurseur.

Et il établit que chaque année il y aurait concours universel et fête royale le premier jour du mois de Navasard, c'est-à-dire le 11 Août.

Et comme en ce jour les Arméniens célébraient les fêtes d'Aramazd et d'Anahit, et répandaient la légende au sujet d'Artavazd, fils d'Artachès, qu'il se trouvait enchaîné au sommet du grand Massis et qu'il en sortait le premier jour de Navasard, lorsque les deux chiens, l'un noir et l'autre blanc,
* A fol. 4 v° a. avaient de leur langue léché et usé les chaînes, * pour amener la fin du monde. Aussi, à cet effet, les prêtres païens avaient-ils édicté une loi enjoignant à tous les forgerons de frapper de leurs marteaux sur les enclumes et autres outils, le premier jour de Navasard, pour consolider les chaînes d'Artavazd.

Or, pour dissiper le mensonge et rétablir la vérité, saint Grégoire institua, en ce jour, une fête universelle pour glorifier éternellement la très sainte Trinité.

En ce jour, martyre de saint Sixte, patriarche de Rome, de son archidiacre Laurent et d'Hippolyte le martyr.

Ils vivaient aux jours de l'empereur Dèce [Décos], l'impie. Sixte [Xestos était Athénien et avait acquis à Athènes toute la science de la philosophie. Il s'était rendu à Rome et y fut sacré patriarche de Rome, après le martyre d'Étienne [Stéphanos], patriarche de Rome. Lorsque Dèce voulut faire son entrée en la ville [à Rome], Sixte ordonna à son archidiacre Laurent [Laurendios] de cacher les vases de l'église, pour qu'ils ne fussent pas pris par les impies. Laurent les vendit tous et en distribua l'argent aux pauvres.

L'empereur Dèce s'était saisi de deux martyrs du Christ en Perse, Abdon [Abios] et Sennen [Sénios], et les avait emmenés à sa suite à Rome. Il les fit jeter aux bêtes fauves, mais elles ne s'en approchèrent point. On présenta aussi l'archidiacre Laurent [à l'empereur] qui lui dit : Apporte-moi les trésors et les biens de l'église. Laurent répondit : Donnez-moi des chars pour transporter les trésors et les biens. Et on lui donna autant de chars et des couples de bœufs qu'il en demanda. Il les prit et s'en alla. Il y fit monter les pauvres, les boiteux, les aveugles, les estropiés auxquels il avait distribué les trésors et les biens, et les conduisit auprès de l'empereur, qui, à leur vue, entra dans une grande fureur. Il ordonna de le frapper brutalement avec des bâtons, et après le supplice, ils le jetèrent dans la prison. Les malades et les infirmes, les aveugles et les possédés avaient accès auprès de lui, et par la prière et par l'imposition des mains il les guérissait. Martyre des saints Anicet et Photin.

Le martyre de ces saints eut lieu * ainsi : L'empereur Dioclétien [Dioclétianos], l'impie, se rendit à la ville de Nicomédie et ordonna de préparer des instruments de torture pour les chrétiens. Tous furent saisis d'épouvante. Quant à saint Anicet [Anictos], voyant la terreur du peuple, ayant avec lui son parent Photin [Photios], il se mêla à la foule, railla les méchantes intentions de l'empereur et cria à voix haute : Je suis chrétien, serviteur du Christ. il se mit à développer la confession divine, la naissance du Christ sans commencement du Père et l'avènement du Christ, dans les derniers temps, pour la rédemption des hommes. Il désavoua, de par leurs noms, tous les dieux des païens.

Dioclétien, ayant appris que sur ses propos, beaucoup avaient cru au Christ, entra dans une grande fureur, déchira le col de ses vêtements et son manteau, et ordonna aux soldats de tuer par l'épée, de massacrer tous ceux qui s'étaient convertis au Christ. Toutefois le stratélate Placide [Plakidas] l'en empêcha, et apaisa l'empereur. On frappa beaucoup saint Anicet, jusqu'à mettre à découvert ses os, on lui lia les mains et les pieds et on le

Le saint fut saisi d'épouvante, * la sueur lui coulait sur le visage; ce que voyant le lion, de sa patte droite, comme avec une éponge, se mit à essuyer la sueur. Et saint Anicet à ce miracle rendit gloire à Dieu. Aussitôt il y eut un grand tremblement de terre, le temple d'Héraclée s'écroula, se brisa en menus morceaux, le côté nord de la ville tomba en ruines et beaucoup de païens y trouvèrent la mort.

On emmena le saint pour lui trancher la tête, et les mains des bourreaux

On le jeta de nouveau dans un bassin d'eau bouillante, l'ange du Seigneur refroidit l'eau en ébullition et le saint demeura intact. Ce que voyant, Dioclétien jura contre les idoles et blasphéma ses dieux.

A ce moment saint Photin accourut et donnant le baiser à saint Anicet, reprocha à l'empereur la vanité de son erreur. On le lia, à son tour, on lui passa des chaînes de fer au cou et on l'emmena en prison. Saint Lucien [Loukianos] et ses disciples chargés de fers les rencontrèrent, ils se donnèrent l'un à l'autre le baiser et se recommandèrent mutuellement de demeurer inébranlables dans la foi du Christ. un feu, on y jeta [les saints] qui se mirent à prier. A la fin de la prière, ils rendirent leur âme à Dieu, le 2 Navasard, le 12 Août.

Leurs corps n'étaient point brûlés, on les retira du feu avec des crochets de fer, et les parents des saints les mirent dans des tombeaux avec grand honneur. Tous ceux qui s'étaient convertis au Christ, accoururent et crièrent : Nous sommes chrétiens. On les jeta dans le feu. Ils y moururent pour le Christ avec une vraie confession de la foi.

Les pierres brûlèrent comme du bois, et tombèrent en ruine jusqu'aux fondements. De même les colonnes de marbre du temple et l'autel et le toit furent réduits comme en cendre de four et le temple fut complètement anéanti.

Les idolâtres saisis de rage assaillirent avec grande colère l'évêque Marcel, s'en emparèrent et le jetèrent dans les flammes. C'est ainsi qu'il mourut d'une mort bienheureuse pour la foi du Christ le 13 Août. Les chrétiens allèrent retirer du feu le corps et l'inhumèrent dans l'enceinte de l'évêché.

Vigile de fête et dormition de notre pure et très sainte, vraie mère de Dieu et toujours vierge Marie. Aussi fête de la consécration de l'église.

L'homme de Dieu, doué des grâces apostoliques, saint Grégoire le thaumaturge, lorsqu'il fut sacré Catholicos, construisit la grande et merveilleuse église, la sainte Catholikê (c'est-à-dire basilique) en la ville de Valarshapat, et y fit célébrer des fêtes de consécration avec grande joie, pour la grande et universelle Catholikê de Dieu, le premier siège du catholikos et la mère des églises de l'Arménie. Telle qu'il l'avait vue en une vision divine, lui-même notre illuminateur saint Grégoire : la fondation des colonnes lumineuses, l'architecture divine, la forme angélique des dômes, sur lesquels apparut le Seigneur, avec les saints martyrs qui y planaient et l'emplacement désigné par la croix lumineuse du Seigneur qui s'y était formée.

Il y avait aperçu le Fils unique de Dieu, le roi de toutes les créatures et des esprits célestes descendre à la tête d'une innombrable armée lumineuse et céleste, y frapper avec un marteau en or, qui fit tressaillir les profondeurs de la terre et chasser dans les abîmes la multitude des démons qui se vantaient de leurs idoles dans le pays d'Arménie. Les abîmes ténébreux retentirent d'échos et toute la terre en fut secouée et trembla.

C'est en ce lieu que saint Grégoire, qui en avait reçu l'ordre de Dieu, et le grand roi Terdat [Tiridate] mirent les fondements de la grande église et d'autres chapelles dédiées aux martyrs. Et lorsqu'elles furent achevées, ils les consacrèrent et les dédièrent au Seigneur, en y faisant célébrer de grandes réjouissances, à l'endroit où le rayon divin descendit du haut des cieux, du Père de la lumière, à qui gloire éternellement.

L'empereur leur dit : Je ne tiendrai aucun compte de vos insultes, sacrifiez aux dieux et vous éviterez les supplices à venir. Les saintes répondirent : Nous ne sacrifierons point aux démons, mais au vrai Dieu. L'empereur ordonna de les suspendre par la langue, de leur déchirer les côtes, de mettre du feu sur leurs plaies et de leur trancher ensuite la tête. Et c'est ainsi qu'elles moururent d'une sainte et enviable mort, le quatre du mois de Navasard, le 14 Août.

En ce même jour mourut la bienheureuse servante du Christ Martine.

Elle était la servante d'un idolâtre. Lorsque son maître vint à connaître qu'elle était chrétienne, il la dénonça au juge. Le martyr du Christ Ursice [Ursicinos] était de la ville de Sibente, général et comte de la légion des tribuns. Un de ses soldats, du nom de Valens, se déclarait, hypocritement, chrétien, et Ursice lui confiait les mystères du christianisme.

Il eut beaucoup à souffrir des douleurs de ses brûlures. Un certain Tertelianus ayant sévèrement blâmé l'éparque au sujet du saint, il fit éteindre le feu et plonger les mains dans de l'eau froide.

Un autre impie du nom d'Albianus, voyant que le saint avait été mis en liberté, eut une grande colère et rentra chez lui furieux. Lorsqu'il se fut mis à table, un scorpion le piqua au pied et il se mit à pousser les hauts cris à cause de la douleur. Sa mère vint auprès de lui et lui dit : Qu'as-tu à faire avec les chrétiens; regarde ce que t'ont fait les plaintes d'Ursice; que tes dieux maintenant te viennent en aide. Il jura et blasphéma contre les idoles, mais ne crut point au Christ, et tout en grinçant des dents, il mâcha sa langue et rendit l'âme douloureusement.

L'éparque ordonna de trancher la tête à saint Ursice. Celui-ci pria le Seigneur et dit : Dieu des armées, qui as donné à ton serviteur la grâce d'une bonne confession, reçois mon âme et épargne, par mon sang, toute persécution contre les chrétiens et contre tes églises.

Michée était fils de Joram, né à Morasthi, de la tribu d'Ephrem, et prophétisa pendant quatre-vingt-quatre ans, ayant pressenti par prophétie, six cent six ans avant, l'avènement du Christ. Il prophétisa beaucoup et blâma Achab, roi de Juda. Son fils Joram fit pendre le saint prophète pour les méchancetés de ses pères, et il fut enterré dans son pays de Morasthi, seul, près du Poliandrion [cimetière] d'Enacim [Ecim]; et son tombeau est connu jusqu'aujourd'hui.

5 NAVASARD, 15 Août.

Précieuse et glorieuse dormition de notre très sainte reine et toujours vierge Marie, mère de Dieu, et fête solennelle et convocation pour sa bienheureuse Assomption, qui se célèbre durant neuf jours.

La très sainte vierge Marie, mère de Dieu, admirable de vie sainte en laquelle elle excella plus que toute autre créature, selon les paroles de Salomon : Beaucoup de filles ont amassé des richesses, mais toi, tu les as toutes surpassées [1], reçut l'annonciation de Gabriel à Nazareth.

Les années de sa vie en tout furent soixante. A l'âge de quinze ans, elle mit au monde le Sauveur de la terre. Il s'écoula trente-trois ans jusqu'au crucifiement du Sauveur, et douze ans après l'ascension du Sauveur au ciel, ce qui fait soixante ans du commencement * de sa vie à sa glorieuse Assomption. * B p. 78 a.

Joseph avait quarante ans lorsque la Vierge lui fut confiée et il s'éteignit dans sa maison de Nazareth en la trente et unième année du Sauveur. Jacques le juste, recommandé par Joseph, continua à avoir soin de la sainte Vierge, car lui, le juste et l'humble, servait la Vierge ensemble avec Joseph, jusqu'à ce qu'elle fût confiée par le Christ à Jean.

La sainte Vierge eut beaucoup de tourments à souffrir de Caïphe et de la persécution des Juifs, qui ne lui permettaient pas de se rendre ouvertement au tombeau pour y prier ou à Gethsémani et autres lieux de l'incarnation du Sauveur, mais elle s'y rendait en secret.

Lorsque Jacques, le frère de Jean, fut tué, on mit le feu à la maison où se trouvait la sainte [Vierge]. Les flammes enveloppèrent les Juifs et en brûlèrent sept personnes et les grands prêtres Caïphe, Anne et Lévi, mais ne firent aucun dommage à la maison. Ils en eurent peur et n'osèrent plus toucher à sa sainte personne.

Le jour du Baptême du Seigneur la populace juive accourut en bandes au Jourdain pour se saisir de la mère du Seigneur et de Jean, mais l'ange de Dieu les transporta sains et saufs de l'autre côté du fleuve. Les Juifs ayant voulu traverser, le fleuve Jourdain fit périr vingt personnes.

Le jour de l'Ascension du Seigneur sur le mont des Oliviers, les Juifs arrivèrent en foule pour jeter des pierres sur la sainte [Vierge], mais ils tuèrent cinquante des leurs, précipités du haut du rocher.

Et comme la description de nombreuses persécutions de la mère du Seigneur pourrait rendre fastidieuse la lecture de ce récit, nous reviendrons au sujet de l'Assomption.

La mère de Dieu, qui est célébrée de tous, après l'Ascension de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ, se livrait incessamment à la prière et à la vie ascétique, et elle trois jours auparavant et lui notifia l'ordre du Seigneur : Il est temps que je prenne ma mère auprès de moi, et lui dit : Reine, ne te trouble pas à ce sujet, mais accueille avec joie mes paroles, car tu vas retourner à la vie immortelle.

A cette nouvelle, la mère de Dieu eut une joie immense, car elle avait hâte d'aller auprès de son fils, vers lequel elle aspirait. Et l'ange l'appela au mont des Oliviers, où elle avait l'habitude de se rendre tous les jours et de s'isoler en prière mentalement. Et tandis qu'elle y priait, l'ange lui apparut et lui parla de son transfert, et pour le lui assurer, il lui remit le trophée, qui était semblable à des branches de palmiers, comme un signe qu'il arrivait du paradis de Dieu.

Et lorsque Marie fut de retour chez elle, elle se mit à prier Dieu, en disant : Tu m'as promis de venir toi-même recevoir mon âme. Une voix se fit entendre qui lui dit : Je ne t'abandonnerai point.

Et elle appela ses parents et ses voisins et leur dit : Allumez tous les lustres et les lampes et restez avec moi pendant trois jours. Et lorsqu'ils furent assemblés, elle leur parla des grandeurs de Dieu et de l'avènement du Seigneur pour la transporter chez lui. Mais les bienheureuses femmes qui se trouvaient auprès d'elle, en entendant qu'elle allait être transportée du milieu d'elles, se laissèrent aller à un grand gémissement, et avec des cris déchirants et des larmes la prièrent de ne point les abandonner.

Tout à coup, sur révélation de l'esprit de Dieu, arrivèrent de tous les coins de la terre, à la maison de la mère de Dieu, les apôtres, que Jean, sorti à la porte, aperçut, et ils se saluèrent réciproquement. Avec eux se trouvaient Denys et Hiérothée et Timothée. Ils entrèrent eux aussi auprès de la très sainte, se prosternèrent devant elle et la bénirent. Elle les honora également.

Ils bénirent Dieu pour l'extraordinaire miracle d'avoir convoqué les apôtres, et elle leur montra sa couchette et le trophée de branches de palmiers et leur ordonna de s'asseoir. Les lampes et les lustres étaient allumés. Ils lui dirent avec force émotion : En te voyant, reine, vivante sur la terre, nous nous consolions en te considérant comme notre Seigneur lui-même et notre maître, et maintenant tu nous remplis de tristesse par ton transfert. Et en disant cela ils baignaient de leurs larmes la couchette et leur personne.

A ce moment arriva le divin Paul, qui, tombant aux pieds de la reine, se prosterna avec larmes, et ouvrant la bouche il lui présenta beaucoup de louanges en disant : Réjouis-toi, mère de la vie et la cause de ma prédication, car, bien que je n'aie pas vu ton fils en corps, en te voyant je croyais le voir.

Or, la très sainte [Vierge] étant invitée à être transportée auprès de son fils, l'évangéliste Jean, saisissant par inspiration une planchette de cyprès, dont été faite la Croix vivifiante, y dessina, sur de nombreuses supplications, les traits de la mère du Seigneur, pour qu'ils demeurassent comme une relique de celle qui est notre vie, si chère à son cœur et si souhaitée par l'évangéliste.

consolaient, et en contemplant la sainte Vierge, ils l'acceptaient comme son fils le Christ. Même Pierre et Paul se rendaient souvent à Jérusalem pour visiter les lieux saints et rendre visite à la sainte Vierge.

Or, les disciples se trouvant convoqués au complet, pour les obsèques de la mère de Dieu, Jean se concerta avec les apôtres pour prier la mère du Seigneur de vouloir apposer la planchette de bois sur les traits divins de son visage et de la bénir, et de prier le Seigneur de combler la terre de ses bienfaits à l'occasion de son Assomption. Car la maladie de la lèpre faisait beaucoup de ravage dans le pays et en particulier à Jérusalem.

du Seigneur pour la prier, Paul dit à la Vierge bénie par tous : Immaculé thalame du Verbe de Dieu, nous te supplions d'accepter cette image de bois, dessinée par Jean, en tes saintes mains, de la bénir et de nous la donner comme un signe de vie pour toute la terre. Prie ton fils, notre Dieu, de faire disparaître, par cette image, la lèpre des fils des hommes qui auront recours à ton intercession. Nous te prions, donne-nous cette image comme une enseigne, comme ton fils unique donna à toute la terre l'arbre de sa mort, en instrument d'immortalité, en trésor de vie et en signe persécuteur des démons. prière de ces hommes élus, qui sur ton ordre ont été envoyés, pour le salut de la terre, évangéliser ta sainte Trinité, et à toi, Père, et Fils et Saint-Esprit, gloire dans l'éternité.

Les apôtres ayant répondu : Amen; il se forma aussitôt une voûte lumineuse sur la très sainte, et une lumière nuageuse, en forme de croix, rayonna sur la sainte image. La très sainte [Vierge] apposa la sainte image sur sa figure et la baigna d'abondantes larmes qu'elle répandit devant le Seigneur. Les apôtres Pierre et Paul reçurent l'image des mains de la très sainte [Vierge] et tous se prosternèrent devant.

Le matin, au lever du soleil, sainte Marie sortit dehors, leva les bras au ciel, pria Dieu, rentra aussitôt et se reposa sur sa couchette. Pierre, avec l'encensoir et l'encens, prit place au chevet, Jean aux pieds du lit, et les autres apôtres se rangèrent tout autour de la couchette; les saints sanglotaient et versaient des larmes.

Il s'y trouva aussi des évêques : Jacques le frère du Seigneur et Denys l'Aréopagite, Hiérothée et Timothée, disciples de Paul, qui veillaient, chacun avec sa lumière, car ils ignoraient quand le Seigneur viendrait.

sième heure il se fit un grondement de tonnerre, et une forte odeur suave se répandit; tous s'endormirent à l'exception des apôtres.

Aussitôt notre Seigneur descendit du ciel accompagné de l'archange Michel et salua les apôtres. La mère de Dieu le voyant, rendit gloire à son nom pour avoir accompli sa promesse vis-à-vis d'elle, et rendit ainsi son âme, trois fois bienheureuse, entre les mains de son Fils et notre Dieu, le visage et l'esprit souriants.

Et notre Seigneur recevant l'âme la remit à l'archange Michel. Personne ne pouvait narrer la gloire de la vue de l'âme; car elle apparut blanche comme la lumière, enveloppée comme d'un corps humain entier, sans distinction de sexe.

Pierre s'écria : Seigneur, qui parmi nous aurait l'âme aussi blanche comme celle de ta mère Marie? Le Seigneur répondit : O Pierre! toute âme humaine est auparavant aussi blanche, mais les péchés la noircissent et l'enveloppent de brume.

Et le Seigneur dit encore à Pierre : Tu iras à gauche de la ville, et dans le tombeau qui s'y trouve, vous déposerez le corps de Marie, vous le garderez, vous tous apôtres, et vous ne vous éloignerez point pendant trois jours.

de son Assomption de la terre au ciel. Toutes les églises fêtent avec grande joie le jour de son repos, ainsi que les fidèles du Christ, le 5 Navasard, le 15 Août.

Lorsque la mère de Dieu sortit du temple elle avait quinze ans, elle resta auprès de Joseph quatre mois et reçut l'Annonciation de l'archange. Lorsque le Christ monta au ciel, la mère de Dieu avait quarante-huit ans. Elle resta dans la maison de l'évangéliste théologien Jean onze ans, et lorsqu'elle fut transportée de la terre au ciel elle avait cinquante-neuf ans.

6 NAVASARD, 16 Août.

Fête de l'Assomption de la mère de Dieu, glorifiée par tous, et, en ce jour, de la sainte et précieuse image de notre Dieu Christ envoyée à Abgar.

Le roi d'Arménie et de Syrie, Abgar, ayant appris de ses gens fidèles que le Christ accomplissait, dans le pays des Juifs, beaucoup de guérisons sans médecines et sans racines, qu'il rendait la vue aux aveugles, faisait marcher les boiteux, guérissait les lépreux, chassait les démons, ressuscitait les morts, eut la conviction que c'était Dieu qui faisait cela. Il lui écrivit une lettre pour le prier de venir le guérir, car il avait une infirmité sur le corps. Et il envoya son fidèle Anané accompagné de Jean, peintre et dessinateur, pour que, dans le cas où il ne viendrait point, on lui apportât son image.

* A fol. 8 r° a * Ces hommes s'étant rendus à Jérusalem, y arrivèrent le jour où le Rédempteur, à dos d'âne, faisait son entrée à Jérusalem, et les vieillards et les enfants le précédant, criaient : Hosanna, béni qui viens au nom du Seigneur [1].

Lorsqu'il sortit du temple, [le Seigneur] se rendit chez Gamaliel pour dîner. Les envoyés d'Abgar se présentèrent à Philippe et dirent : Seigneur, nous voudrions voir Jésus [1]. Il prit avec lui André, et ils lui remirent la lettre d'Abgar. Et Jésus dit : Le moment est arrivé pour que le Fils de l'homme soit glorifié [2], et il ordonna à Thomas d'écrire la lettre de réponse à Abgar : Il ne me reste que peu de temps pour accomplir la volonté de mon Père, et ensuite je monterai vers lui et enverrai un de mes disciples pour te guérir.

Lorsque Jean, le peintre, vit que Jésus n'avait pas accepté de se rendre avec eux, il se mit à peindre son portrait, pour le présenter à Abgar, selon son ordre; il peignait les traits de jeunesse, de l'âge dans lequel se trouvait le Rédempteur, mais l'ayant fixé de nouveau, il l'aperçut changé en un vieillard, d'une beauté remarquable. Et quittant les premiers traits, tout surpris, il se mit à peindre l'image de la vieillesse. L'ayant fixé de nouveau, il l'aperçut tout beau jeune homme. Alors il se rendit compte qu'il lui serait impossible de rendre les traits de son visage.

Jésus, qui connaissait sa pensée, l'appela *à lui, et comme il avait lavé, à l'eau, sa sainte figure toute lumineuse, il voulait l'essuyer avec une serviette; lorsqu'il eut appliqué la toile tissue d'or sur sa figure, les traits du Seigneur s'y imprimèrent aussitôt sans le concours de couleurs et d'art humain, La première persécution des Chrétiens eut lieu par l'empereur Trajan, la deuxième persécution par l'empereur Dèce et la troisième persécution par l'empereur Dioclétien.

Saint Diomède quitta la ville de Tarse et se rendit à Nicée. Il y guérissait, au nom de Dieu, tous les malades; entrait dans les prisons auprès des chrétiens, les consolait, soignait tous les malades, guérissait toutes leurs plaies et les encourageait à demeurer fermes dans la foi du Christ.

Lorsqu'ils l'arrêtèrent à l'endroit où [le saint] avait l'habitude de prier, il se mit à genoux, éleva ses bras au ciel et pria Dieu, et la prière encore sur les lèvres, il rendit l'âme à Dieu, le 16 Août.

Les soldats tranchèrent la tête du cadavre, mais furent aussitôt saisis de cécité; et, les yeux éteints, ils apportèrent la tête à l'empereur qui, très surpris, ordonna aux soldats de remporter la tête et de la remettre auprès du corps. Lorsqu'ils l'eurent rapportée, leurs yeux s'ouvrirent aussitôt et ils crurent au Christ. Ils prêchèrent avec hardiesse aux autres les merveilles de Dieu.

De nouveau fête de la dormition de la mère de Dieu glorifiée de tous, et martyre du prêtre Miron.

Le saint prêtre Miron vivait au temps de l'empereur Dèce, l'impie. Le jour de la naissance du Christ, le président Antipater, l'impie, * se rendit à l'église pour en chasser les chrétiens. Le prêtre Miron alla à sa rencontre, lui fit rebrousser chemin avec insultes et encouragea les chrétiens. Le président indigné ordonna de le pendre, de déchirer son corps; on alluma ensuite une fournaise, dont les flammes montaient à cinquante aunes, et on y jeta saint Miron. Il se trouva à son aise dans la fournaise comme dans un temple, dont les flammes sortirent et brûlèrent beaucoup d'infidèles. * A fol. 9 rº a.

Le président aperçut des personnes debout dans la fournaise avec saint Miron, et leurs visages étaient plus resplendissants que le soleil. Le saint sortit des flammes avec une mine joyeuse et, se présentant devant le président, prêcha à tous le nom du Seigneur Jésus et son royaume éternel. Il rem-

Les glorieux martyrs du Christ Laurus et Florus étaient deux frères jumeaux, de même mère, nés le même jour. Ils étaient de leur métier tailleurs de pierres, disciples des saints martyrs Proclus et Maximus.

* A fol. 9 vº a. Après la bonne * mort de leurs maîtres, ils quittèrent la ville de Byzance et se rendirent dans la région de Dardania, dans la ville d'Ulpiana, dans le pays d'Illyrie, et y pratiquèrent leur métier de tailleurs de pierres auprès du juge Lycion. Licinius, le fils de l'impératrice Elpidia, envoya une lettre au juge Lycion demandant les saints auprès de lui, pour lui construire un temple d'idoles. Lorsqu'ils s'y rendirent, il fut pris d'une grande joie en les voyant, leur donna cent écus et mit à leur service quarante ouvriers. Il leur indiqua et traça l'emplacement appelé Kharic. Lorsqu'ils eurent commencé à tailler les pierres, l'œuvre avança aisément et rapidement, car Dieu aidait à leur œuvre. Un jour qu'ils taillaient du marbre, une parcelle en jaillit et alla toucher l'œil d'Anastasius, fils d'un prêtre des idoles, et l'obscurcit. Son père arriva et assomma de coups de bâton les saints. Licinius les fit venir et les interrogea. Ils lui dirent : L'accident est arrivé malgré nous et sans le vouloir, qu'il nous présente * son fils et nous le guérirons au nom du Seigneur. Lorsque Licinius eut appris cela, il entra dans une grande colère, et ordonna d'allumer un feu dans une fosse profonde et d'y jeter ces pauvres. Lorsqu'on les conduisit à l'endroit, les saints prièrent Dieu pour eux et avant qu'ils fussent jetés dans le feu, ils rendirent leur âme.

Pendant qu'Alexianus se trouvait à Thessalonique, l'empereur Constantin se convertit au Christ, et donna des ordres écrits à toutes les villes et villages, campagnes et provinces, de délivrer des chaînes et des prisons tous les chrétiens, et qu'à celui qui ne se ferait baptiser et ne deviendrait pas chrétien, de lui confisquer tous ses biens, au profit du Palais.

C'est alors qu'Alexianus se rendit à la ville d'Ulpiana et s'unit au bienheureux Phocas; ils nettoyèrent ensemble le temple d'idoles, que les saints avaient construit, et le consacrèrent église. Ils se rendirent à la fosse, y creusèrent et en retirèrent intacts les corps des saints martyrs Laurus et Florus, les déposèrent dans le temple qu'ils avaient construit eux-mêmes et, l'ayant nettoyé, le consacrèrent église.

* A fol. 10 v° a. Saint Atom était un grand prince d'Arménie. Il se trouvait en Perse * avec ses troupes. Hazkert, le roi des Perses, l'adorateur du feu, les contraignit de renier le Christ. [Atom] retourna au pays d'Arménie avec ses troupes. Hazkert envoya à leur poursuite une nombreuse armée avec ordre de les convertir à leur religion ou de les exécuter par l'épée, là où ils les rejoindraient. Les saints arrivés dans leur région, en Arménie, établirent le camp près de la demeure d'un solitaire, qui leur prédit une mort de martyre pour le Christ. Dans la même nuit, le Christ apparut à saint Atom et leur distribua [au saint et à ses troupes] des couronnes de roses rouges. Le lendemain, l'armée noire des Perses les rejoignit. Ils montèrent aussitôt en selle et se disposèrent à attaquer l'armée des Perses, mais la vision de la nuit apparut manifestement à tous, et ils descendirent tous de leur monture et offrirent de bon gré leur cou à l'épée persane.

et les convertit à la foi du Christ. Tous trouvèrent la mort par le glaive en une bonne profession [de foi] dans le Christ.

Quant à saint André, il mit genoux à terre et pria Dieu ainsi : Seigneur Dieu, reçois mon âme pécheresse et accorde ta miséricorde à tous ceux qui célébreront notre mémoire. Une voix se fit entendre qui lui dit : A l'endroit où votre sang sera versé, surgira une source qui guérira les malades et chassera les démons. Et tous ceux qui m'adresseront leur prière en ton nom, trouveront le salut de leur âme et de leur corps. On lui trancha ensuite la tête le 19 Août. Aussitôt surgit, à l'endroit où fut répandu le sang de saint André, une source d'eau, et tous les malades, les infirmes, les possédés y trouvèrent la guérison. Et ceux qui subirent la mort avec saint André étaient au nombre de deux mille quatre-vingt-dix-huit martyrs.

En ce jour martyre du bienheureux et nouveau martyr Khatchatour.

Le victorieux martyr du Christ Khatchatour était de la ville de Tigranokert, jeune homme de vingt ans, beau de visage, d'une belle taille, et aimant la prière et la lecture. Ayant entendu parler des vies et du * martyre des saints, son âme désirait ardemment partager une mort semblable à eux, pour être lui aussi associé à leur couronne. Il fut tellement épris de l'amour du martyre, pour la foi du Christ, qu'il voyait son martyre jusque dans ses rêves. * B p. 89 b.

Un jour, en sortant de chez lui, il dit : Je me rends au marché et je crois que je ne retournerai plus à la maison, car le Seigneur m'appelle. Le même jour, comme il fut insulté par un infidèle, il ne lui donna pour toute réponse que cela : Votre religion est erronée et fausse. Alors une multitude d'infidèles se rassembla autour de lui et l'ayant saisi, le conduisit au tribunal en criant : Il a insulté notre religion.

Le juge l'exhorta avec beaucoup de douceur à renier la foi du Christ, à sauver sa vie et à accepter de riches cadeaux. Le martyr du Christ répondit : Vous me donneriez toutes les richesses de la terre ou vous me tueriez en m'arrachant la peau, je n'abandonnerai point le Christ, mon Dieu, et je ne me détournerai point de sa vraie foi.

lités et après bien des paroles affables et des menaces, vu la fermeté de sa volonté, on décréta de lui enlever la peau et de le tuer.

On le mit à nu et on lui attacha les mains derrière le dos, et suivi d'une grande foule on le conduisit hors de la ville; en tête un héraut proclamait [sa condamnation], et le martyr du Christ s'en allait comme à un joyeux banquet.

Lorsqu'il fut arrivé au lieu désigné, il dit aux bourreaux : Enlevez-moi la peau maintenant, comme il vous plaira. Et les bourreaux lui ôtèrent la peau du dos jusqu'aux reins, et de la poitrine au ventre. On le promena ainsi, la peau pendante, dans les rues de la ville; le saint martyr marchait le visage souriant, et chantait des cantiques sur les saints martyrs.

* B p. 90 a. * On le conduisit à la grande place, où les bourreaux l'exhortèrent en disant : Il est encore possible pour toi de guérir, aie pitié de ta jeunesse, renie ta foi et convertis-toi à notre religion. Mais le vaillant martyr, méprisant leur propos, confessait incessamment Dieu le Christ. Les bourreaux lui dirent : Étends tes bras maintenant sur cette pierre pour que nous les brisions. Il les étendit aussitôt. On lui fracassa les deux bras à coups de haches. On lui réclama ensuite les pieds. Il les étendit également de bon cœur. On lui brisa aussi les jambes des deux pieds, et on l'abandonna sur place à moitié mourant jusqu'au soir.

L'ayant bue, il leur dit : Je désire la sainte communion. Les prêtres lui envoyèrent le saint mystère mis dans du pain, qu'ayant consommé, il rendit grâce à Dieu, et fut rempli de joie spirituelle. Il demeura en vie encore quelques heures et rendit son âme à Dieu au milieu de la nuit. Une lumière resplendissante descendit sur son saint corps, devant les yeux des gardiens et de beaucoup d'autres personnes dont les magasins entouraient l'endroit.

A l'aube du jour, avec la permission du juge, toutes les communautés chrétiennes de la localité, d'un commun accord, enlevèrent le corps et l'inhumèrent avec solennité. La nuit après, une grande lumière se produisit de nouveau sur son tombeau constatée par les chrétiens et les infidèles. Nombre de miracles de guérisons sur les malades et les infirmes ont lieu au tombeau du saint. Il se fit également des miracles de la tasse avec laquelle [le saint] avait bu de l'eau, car on la remplissait d'eau et on en faisait boire aux malades, * ou bien on répandait sur eux de l'eau avec, et ils en trouvaient la guérison. * B p. 90 b.

Une croix apparut en forme de cristal, et de cette croix une voix se fit entendre à Just qui disait : D'où viens-tu et où vas-tu? Just répondit, saisi de grande frayeur : Je suis de la ville de Rome, fils de Tibériade, qui me fit inscrire dans ce corps. Je suis parti avec mes compagnons et notre général en guerre contre les barbares et nous les avons vaincus. Nous retournons en paix et avec beaucoup de joie en notre ville de Rome. Et il ajouta : Et toi, Seigneur, qui serais-tu? La voix de la croix lui dit : Je suis Jésus-Christ, qui ai revêtu un corps. Just dit : Et pourquoi as-tu revêtu un corps? La voix de la croix répondit : Si je n'avais revêtu un corps, l'homme n'aurait pu être délivré de la servitude; si je n'avais été condamné, les condamnés n'auraient pu sortir de

Just s'étant réveillé tout tremblant, distribua tous ses biens aux pauvres et aux étrangers et adora, en secret, avec grande foi, le Christ.

Un des soldats l'ayant appris alla le raconter au général, qui envoya des soldats pour l'amener près de lui. Ceux-ci s'étant rendus, le trouvèrent en prière, le saisirent et le conduisirent devant le général qui l'interrogea. Il confessa le Christ avec hardiesse et dit : Je suis devenu chrétien, je n'offrirai des sacrifices qu'au seul Dieu le Christ et non aux idoles. Le général lui dit : Je vois que tu es un beau jeune homme et j'ai pitié de toi; si tu ne m'écoutes et ne sacrifies à nos dieux, tu auras bien des tortures à subir.

Le général voyant qu'il ne se laissait pas fléchir, écrivit à son sujet au préfet Magnentius, et envoya le prisonnier après la lettre. Lorsqu'il eut lu la lettre, il entra dans une grande fureur et le manda auprès de lui. On l'étendit nu, et on lui frappa sur la poitrine et sur le dos avec des nerfs de bœuf. Saint Just, les yeux fixés au ciel, priait en disant : Seigneur Dieu, envoie l'ange de guérison pour soulager les douleurs de mon corps. Aussitôt les bourreaux se mirent à se frapper les uns les autres.

On jeta le saint en prison et l'ange du Seigneur s'approchant des plaies du martyr les guérit. Lorsqu'on le sortit de la prison, on s'aperçut que le corps était indemne.

On lui posa sur la tête un casque enflammé et on le piqua sous les aisselles avec des broches rougies au feu, et on l'étendit sur un brasier pour emmener avec lui des menuisiers et des tailleurs de pierre, pour construire un temple au roi des Indes.

Le Christ apparut à Anbanès et dit : J'ai un serviteur qui connaît la menuiserie et beaucoup d'industries, et lui montra de loin Thomas.

Anbanès demanda à Thomas : Est-ce ton maître celui-là? Il lui répondit : Oui, c'est lui.

Et Jésus lui vendit Thomas et en reçut trente écus des Indes. Il lui donna un billet ainsi : Moi, Jésus, fils de Joseph de Nazareth, ai vendu mon serviteur Thomas au marchand Anbanès et en ai reçu trente écus; que personne coup étonnés de la rapide exécution des paroles de l'apôtre. On le conduisit pour bénir la fiancée et l'époux. Ils partirent de là et se rendirent au pays des Indes. Le roi des Indes se réjouit de son arrivée et, le croyant un ouvrier d'art, lui remit de fortes sommes pour lui construire un palais. Il prit les sommes et les distribua aux pauvres et aux indigents. Le roi l'ayant appris le fit lier et jeter en prison.

Le frère du roi vint à mourir, et l'apôtre le ressuscita * et il crut au Christ. Il demanda à son frère de lui donner le temple que l'apôtre lui avait construit au ciel par les pauvres, et lui décrivit la beauté de l'édifice. Le roi s'en réjouit et crut en Dieu. * A fol. 13 v° a.

L'apôtre partit et se rendit dans une autre contrée des Indes pour y prêcher. La femme du roi Mejdèh et son fils se convertirent aux paroles de l'apôtre et ne se séparaient pas de lui; ce qu'ayant appris, Mejdèh en fut irrité et fit mettre en prison l'apôtre. Il le remit ensuite entre les mains d'un prince et de quatre soldats, qui l'ayant conduit sur une montagne, le tuèrent à coups de lance des quatre côtés et l'y enterrèrent. Un de ses disciples vola le corps du saint apôtre Thomas, et l'emporta en Mésopotamie; et de là il fut transporté en Arménie.

La fête du saint apôtre se célèbre le 22 Août, pour la gloire du Christ.

En ce jour martyre de saint Agathonicus, dont le nom signifie heureux vainqueur.

L'empereur Maximien, l'impie, envoya de la ville de Nicomédie un président de nom Eutolmios dans la province du Pont jusqu'à Néocésarée pour y rechercher et y soumettre à l'interrogatoire les chrétiens. A cause des grands fleuves, difficiles à traverser, qui se trouvaient sur la route, on ne pouvait voyager par terre.

Il y trouva saint Zoticus avec ses disciples qui professaient le Christ et
* A fol. 13 vº b. enseignaient * aux autres. Il les tua sur place. Les chrétiens les enterrèrent secrètement dans un endroit célèbre. Le président partit jusqu'à Néocésarée, et tous les chrétiens qu'il rencontra d'humble condition parmi les gens, il les tua par l'épée; quant aux principaux et aux notables, il les fit flageller et cruellement torturer et, les emmenant avec lui, il revint à Nicomédie.

On lui fit savoir qu'Agathonicus avait converti le grand prince [Prinkips] à la foi du Christ, et qu'ils se trouvaient actuellement dans la propriété dite Kiverno avec beaucoup d'autres qu'il avait convertis de l'idolâtrie. Il ordonna à nombre de soldats de se rendre à cet endroit pour lui amener Agathonicus et ceux qu'il avait convertis au christianisme. Les soldats s'y étant rendus, les saints à leur vue les suivirent de bon gré. Chemin faisant, Agathonicus enseigna aux soldats à connaître notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ, Dieu éternel.

Lorsqu'ils arrivèrent à la porte de la ville, le président Eutolmios prit place au tribunal. Il demanda : Où sont ceux qui méprisent les ordres de l'empereur? On lui dit : Ils sont présents devant votre haute Seigneurie, le noble Agathonicus, le petit-fils du grand Hippasius [Pasicus] et fils de l'éparque Asclépiade, c'est lui qui convertit * à sa religion le grand prince [Prinkips]. * A fol. 14 r° a.
Le président lui dit : Est-ce vrai ce qu'on dit de toi? Saint Agathonicus, par la grâce et la sagesse qu'il avait reçues de Dieu, se mit à développer, d'après les saintes écritures, les merveilles et les miracles de Dieu; il émerveilla le président et ceux qui occupaient des sièges au conseil. Il ordonna de le frapper vigoureusement.

De là, [le président] se rendit auprès de l'empereur en Thrace, emmenant à sa suite les martyrs confesseurs du Christ, accablés de chaînes, pour que l'empereur lui-même les jugeât. En route il exécuta beaucoup [de chrétiens]. Le président voyant que quelques-uns d'entre les martyrs, à sa suite, ne pouvaient marcher à cause des grandes tortures, leur demanda s'ils revenaient à leur religion et immolaient aux idoles pour reprendre leur rang et en jouir, mais aucun ne consentit, et il leur fit trancher la tête sur place. Lorsque le président arriva à Chalcédoine, il vit Sévérianus qui prêchait encore le Christ; il lui fit trancher la tête par l'épée. Et lorsqu'ils firent voile pour Byzance là ils flagellèrent saint Agathonicus et les autres prisonniers, des Arméniens et des Syriens. Il envoya son frère Thaddée à Édesse au roi d'Arménie, Abgar, pour accomplir la promesse que lui avait faite le Sauveur, et là il illumina beaucoup de gens adonnés à l'idolâtrie, par le baptême des saints fonts.

Quant à lui, le bienheureux Thomas, il prêcha aux Parthes et aux Mèdes, aux Perses et aux Kirmans, aux Bactriates et aux Mages et jusqu'en Chine, opérant partout des miracles et des prodiges au nom du Christ, convertissant beaucoup de gens à la vraie foi, établissant des églises en plusieurs pays et des ministres pour le culte.

Il parcourut aussi l'Éthiopie, qui s'appelle Abyssinie, et y évangélisa Jésus-Christ. Il se rendit dans les provinces du royaume des trois mages qui vinrent à l'adoration de la naissance du Christ, et il les baptisa et en fit ses coopérateurs à la prédication de l'évangile.

Il arriva ensuite aux Indes, prêcha le Christ dans tout le pays, y fit de grands prodiges, auxquels nombre de gens crurent et se firent baptiser au nom de la très sainte Trinité. Mais le roi des Indes Mejdèh, * excité par les prêtres païens, fit arrêter Thomas et le tortura beaucoup. * B p. 92 a. Ensuite blessé par les lances de quatre soldats et des quatre côtés, l'apôtre mourut en la ville de Balamidis et y fut enterré. Le tombeau du saint apôtre est un lieu de pèlerinage célèbre jusqu'aujourd'hui, et bien des guérisons s'y opèrent pour la gloire du Christ.

Après la mort du saint apôtre, un de ses disciples de nom Xanticus, qui était allé avec lui aux Indes, homme pieux et craignant Dieu, de nationalité syrienne de la Mésopotamie, ayant pris les saints restes pendant la nuit, s'enfuit du pays des Indes, et vint habiter la Mésopotamie syrienne, dans la ville d'Édesse. Il vénérait en secret les saints ossements, qui restèrent longtemps encore après la mort, en bonne confession, de Xanticus dans la maison de celui-ci.

Aux jours du grand Constantin, le pieux empereur, les fidèles du pays, témoins des grands prodiges qui s'opéraient des restes du saint apôtre, honorèrent sa maison d'habitation. Ils y construisirent un tombeau élégant avec église, et l'ornèrent de riches vases. Ils y restèrent jusqu'aux jours de Julien l'Apostat.

Lorsque ce dernier mourut en Perse, l'armée des Perses envahit le pays jusqu'en la Mésopotamie syrienne. Un des généraux perses, trouvant les restes du saint apôtre Thomas renfermés dans un précieux coffret et recouvert de riches étoffes, crut avoir trouvé un grand trésor et, de joie, ne voulut l'ouvrir jusqu'au soir. A la tombée de la nuit, il demanda de la lumière et l'ouvrit discrètement. Mais lorsqu'il aperçut les saints ossements, il entra en colère, les jeta aux pieds des chevaux et s'en alla coucher tristement. Aussitôt les chevaux se mirent à donner des signes d'inquiétude

Il y avait un homme, nommé Houssoup, qui soignait les chevaux. Lorsqu'il vit ce qui se passait, il en fut fort troublé et se baissa auprès des pieds des chevaux pour y chercher la cause de leur emportement. Il aperçut sur le sol une lumière qui jaillissait des saints ossements, fut pris de grande stupeur et frayeur, et, comme mû par l'inspiration de Dieu, il les ramassa dans un linge, tout en réfléchissant avec effroi à tout ce qu'il venait de voir.

Lorsqu'il se fut endormi, il vit le ciel ouvert et un ange d'apparence terrible, en forme de flamme de feu, descendit près de lui, l'appela de par son nom en lui disant : Regarde et comprends les merveilles de Dieu, contemple la puissance de ces saints ossements qui se trouvent à ton chevet. Alors il éleva les yeux et vit une colonne de feu près de lui sur un socle d'or et d'une hauteur effrayante qui montait jusqu'au ciel. Une croix lumineuse le surmontait ressemblant à un zaphir. Plus loin apparaissaient onze autres colonnes, également de feu, atteignant le ciel et dont les bases reposaient sur la terre. Sur chaque colonne une croix lumineuse de zaphir et des arcades merveilleuses rattachées l'une à l'autre, d'une belle couleur blanche de perle.

Sur ces arcades d'autres arcades aqueuses, bleu de ciel, en forme de cristal, comme un nuage condensé, pleines d'une foule lumineuse de gens revêtus de la croix. Sur les arcades aqueuses un char divin, merveilleux à voir.

incompréhensible, et celui qui s'y trouvait assis, était entouré d'une gloire indescriptible, inénarrable.

Des séraphins à six ailes l'entouraient. Leurs ailes apparaissaient comme des flammes d'un feu violent. Des chérubins pleins d'yeux se trouvaient
* B p. 93 a. auprès du trône royal, et n'osaient contempler * la gloire de l'apparition divine. Et les douze apôtres se tenaient assis sur douze sièges, à droite et à gauche du char. De la première colonne sortait une lumière terrifiante, sous forme de rayon qui s'élançait vers l'orient.

Et l'ange qui était descendu près de Houssoup lui dit : Homme, tu as vu les merveilles qui t'ont apparu. Il lui répondit : Je t'en prie, Seigneur, explique-moi ce que signifie cette vision terrible et merveilleuse qui m'est apparue.

L'ange lui dit : La première colonne que tu as vue près de ton chevet, c'est la prédication de l'apôtre Thomas, qui a instruit les Indes et les Albassais et les Arméniens, et dont les ossements sont à ton chevet. Les onze colonnes que tu as vues, représentent la prédication de chacun des apôtres établis dans les pays qui leur sont échus par le sort. Les arcades lumineuses sur les colonnes sont les églises dispersées dans l'univers, édifiées sur la base des apôtres et des prophètes.

Les arcades aqueuses, bleu de ciel, nuageuses, remplies d'une multitude de gens revêtus de la croix, représentent le baptême des saints fonts. Car ceux qui sont illuminés par les saints fonts resplendissent en toute pureté Lorsque la lumière parvint au pays d'Arménie, dans la province d'Altsnik, à un endroit nommé Pali, près du village du nom de Holtz, elle s'y arrêta. Et l'homme comprit que c'était là que devrait être la demeure du saint.

Il y avait en cet endroit une église; et celui qui desservait l'église était un prêtre pieux et craignant Dieu. L'homme se fit baptiser par ce prêtre et prit le nom de Joseph, ainsi que l'avait interpellé, de sa voix, l'ange. Il revêtit l'habit

Et l'homme, Joseph, desservit le saint en toute sainteté, à cet endroit, pendant six années. Ensuite la même vision lui réapparut comme la première fois : la lumière jaillissant des saints restes se porta vers l'Orient. Il se leva, prit les restes, et suivit la lumière, dans la province de Rechtounik, jusqu'à une colline qui fait face à Manaskert, au-dessus du village nommé Betsits. Il y habitait un ermite, qui menait une vie d'ange. Joseph établit sa demeure, avec les saints restes, auprès de lui. Ils vécurent ensemble comme religieux et tous les deux servirent le saint jusqu'au jour de leur mort.

Les satrapes du pays, qui étaient de la grande maison des Artsrounik, construisirent un couvent en cet endroit et y établirent des prêtres avec des religieux. 13 NAVASARD, 23 Août.

Neuvième jour de la dormition de la Vierge Marie glorifiée de tous et martyre de l'évêque Irénée.

Saint Irénée était évêque de la province de Sirmium, au temps de l'empereur Dioclétien, l'idolâtre. Les soldats impies le saisirent et le conduisirent en Pannonie chez le juge Probus. Il confessa et prêcha la vraie foi en notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ. On lui fit subir de cruelles tortures, et on le jeta en prison.

Quelques jours après, le juge ordonna de le faire sortir de la prison et de lui trancher la tête. Lorsqu'on était pour lui couper la tête, il s'arrêta sur le pont, étendit ses mains et pria ainsi : Seigneur, ouvre-moi la porte du ciel et reçois l'âme de ton serviteur, car c'est pour ton peuple et pour ton Église catholique que j'ai subi les tortures et que je verse mon sang.

Lorsqu'on lui trancha la tête, on jeta le corps dans le fleuve qui s'appelle la Salve, le 23 Août.

[B * En ce jour, fête du saint prêtre martyr Irénée, évêque de Lyon et imitateur des apôtres.

Saint Irénée, la grande colonne de la piété et de la foi, le prélat revêtu de Dieu et le docteur de l'Église, le puissant champion de la vérité et le vainqueur des adversaires hérétiques, était l'imitateur des saints apôtres. Il devint évêque de Lyon en Gaule du temps des empereurs Marc et Antonin.

Il suivit et devint l'hôte des saints apôtres. Il laissa à la sainte Église nombre de livres merveilleux sur la sainte foi orthodoxe, pour l'édification de la doctrine chrétienne. Et ceux qui vinrent après lui, les docteurs de l'Église y puisèrent les raisons, la manière et les règles pour commenter les saintes Écritures, inspirées de Dieu, dans leurs discours. Car il fit le commentaire de toutes les écritures inspirées de Dieu, il convertit nombre de païens, les illumina par des miracles, par sa doctrine et sa vie pleine de vertus.

Après avoir bien gouverné son peuple et accompli sans tache son ministère d'évêque, en Gaule, dans la ville de Lyon; après avoir encouragé nombre de personnes au martyre et bien tenu le gouvernail de l'Église, parlé de choses édifiantes et donné des conseils utiles, il arracha beaucoup de gens à l'erreur du démon et les fit martyrs du Christ; il produisit des fruits pour Dieu à l'époque de la persécution d'Antonin. Il ne cessa d'exhorter et d'encourager

L'aimé de Dieu et l'excellent homme Timothée était du pays de Palestine, orné d'une conduite agréable à Dieu, ayant prêché la foi pieuse du Christ. Il se rendit à la ville de Gaza, se présenta devant Urbain, le président impie, professa la pieuse foi du christianisme et développa le mystère de l'Incarnation de notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ pour le salut du monde entier.

La colère du président redoubla; et il fit torturer saint Timothée à tel point, que beaucoup le tinrent pour mort; mais il endura tout pour l'amour du Christ.

On le jeta dans la prison et on le contraignit à renier le Christ, à immoler aux démons, pour éviter les tortures et la mort, mais il préféra la mort à cause de l'espoir du Christ à la vie pour les idoles. Ensuite on le jeta dans un feu, pas trop ardent, pour qu'il ne mourût pas trop vite et qu'il brûlât lentement. Le saint, tout en priant, rendit son âme à Dieu le 24 Navasard.

Ils s'emparèrent du tombeau et le jetèrent avec le corps du saint à la mer, en même temps que les quatre autres tombeaux de quatre martyrs dont les noms sont les suivants : Papianus, Lucianus, Grégorius et Akakios. La mer rapporta et déposa les tombeaux sur une île nommée Liparis, et ils y restèrent.

Les saints martyrs avaient suivi le grand apôtre comme un roi, mais là où il lui plut de s'arrêter, là ils l'abandonnèrent et retournèrent aussitôt à l'endroit où la divine providence daigna leur désigner la demeure à chacun : Papianus à la ville d'Amila en Sicile; Lucianus à Messine; Grégorius à Kolimi, ville de la Calabrie, et Akakios à la ville nommée Ascali.

C'est alors que le divin apôtre, en une vision, se rappela au souvenir de l'évêque Agathon, qui dirigeait l'évêché avec beaucoup de zèle, et qui s'empressa aussitôt sur le lieu, et en apercevant le grand et terrifiant miracle, plein d'enthousiasme, il s'écria : O Liparis, d'où te vient-il tant de belles richesses? Tu es vraiment heureuse outre mesure, et tu es glorifiée supérieurement. Forme des chœurs, et danse de joie, accueille de tes propres mains et crie à lui : Sois le bienvenu, apôtre du Seigneur. Et comme il fallait déposer le précieux tombeau en un lieu célèbre, où devait s'ériger un temple à la gloire du très célèbre apôtre, ils transportèrent en cet endroit le tombeau, qui accomplit aussitôt et tous les jours de nombreuses guérisons aux malades et aux infirmes et aux possédés du démon.

Longtemps après, aux jours de l'empereur Théophile, à cause de nos innombrables péchés, les Sarrasins s'emparèrent de toute l'île Liparis, de sorte qu'il n'y resta plus personne.

Le prince de Bénévent qui connaissait et avait appris les miracles de l'apôtre, mû par l'ardente foi dont il était animé envers le saint, envoya des gens avec des navires de la ville d'Amalphi, dépensa de fortes sommes et les pria d'aller lui rapporter le grand trésor inestimable. Ce qu'ils firent. Et ce prince, lorsqu'il eut connaissance que le tombeau revenait seul nageant sur mer, prit avec lui l'évêque du lieu et tout le clergé et la population et ils se rendirent au-devant jusqu'à la ville de Benendos. Il fit déposer le tombeau dans un magnifique endroit, où il accomplit toujours des guérisons aux fidèles pour la gloire de notre Dieu le Christ.]

15 NAVASARD, 25 Août.

Fête de la très sainte mère de Dieu établie par saint Grégoire l'Illuminateur.

Saint Grégoire l'Illuminateur et le grand patriarche de toute la Grande Arménie détruisit toutes les statues des idoles et supprima le culte du démon du pays d'Arménie, de Géorgie et d'Albanie. A leur place il fit ériger des églises au nom de la sainte mère de Dieu Marie et de saint Jean le Précurseur. Il changea les fêtes impures en des fêtes saintes, car du temps où le pays se trouvait dans l'idolâtrie on célébrait en ce jour la fête de la déesse Anahit et on l'appelait la fille du mâle Aramazd; c'était l'Aphrodite des Grecs.

C'est alors que saint Grégoire construisit sur l'emplacement des idoles une église, dans le village d'Eriza, dans la province d'Ekeliats, au nom de la mère de Dieu, où de grands miracles s'opèrent au nom de la mère du Seigneur jusqu'aujourd'hui.

Saint Grégoire notre Illuminateur établit cette fête le 15 Navasard, le 25 Août.

En ce jour, fête du saint évêque Athanase qui baptisa sainte Anthousa.

* A fol. 15 r° a. La bienheureuse servante du Christ Anthousa vivait à * Séleucie, aux jours de l'empereur Valérien, l'impie. Elle aspirait à la foi chrétienne et au baptême divin, et pria sa mère de la laisser devenir chrétienne, mais elle s'y opposa et l'en empêchait.

Le bienheureux Athanase évêque de la ville de Tarse enseignait la parole de la vie et faisait de grands miracles. L'ange du Seigneur dit à Anthousa : Athanase est arrivé à Séleucie, et lui montra les traits et l'image de son visage. Elle prit avec elle deux domestiques, donna comme prétexte à sa mère : Je vais auprès de ma nourrice ; et se rendit auprès de l'évêque, le salua et implora le baptême divin. Il fit le signe de la sainte croix sur le sol, et une source surgit de l'endroit et deux anges leur apparurent sous la forme de soldats, tenant à la main des vêtements blancs pour en revêtir Anthousa dans le baptême.

Lorsqu'elle fut baptisée au nom de la sainte Trinité, elle communia du

La bienheureuse Anthousa se dépouilla de ses vêtements très coûteux et les donna aux pauvres. Ses deux domestiques Charisimos et Néophytos se firent aussi baptiser et retournèrent chez eux remplis de joie.

Anthousa se rendit auprès de sa nourrice, qui la sachant baptisée, ne voulut pas l'accueillir chez elle. Elle retourna chez sa mère et la trouva dans une grande tristesse. Elle quitta la maison secrètement et se rendit auprès de l'évêque Athanase, se fit religieuse, revêtit une tunique de hère, et un crucifix à la main prit le chemin du désert dans la montagne et y mena une vie ascétique pendant vingt-quatre ans. Les bêtes fauves du désert lui apportaient à manger. Le démon vint la trouver sous la forme d'un moine et lui dit : Viens prier avec moi. Mais elle le reconnut, fit le signe de la sainte croix, le chassa et il disparut. Le démon lui apparut une seconde fois et lui dit : Viens boire au fleuve de lait et de miel. Elle le chassa, et le fit disparaître.

L'ange du Seigneur lui apparut dans sa prière et lui annonça sa fin prochaine. Elle se rendit au rocher où elle avait l'habitude de se reposer, et s'étendit sur la pierre, posa ses mains en forme de croix sur sa poitrine et rendit son âme à Dieu le 25 Août. Son corps resta sur ce rocher quatre ans

* A fol. 15 v° a. * et fut conservé intact.

Une femme nommée Polychronia, nom qui se traduit une personne « de longue vie », et qui habitait à vingt lieues de distance, regarda vers la montagne, prit une croix et se mit à la recherche du corps, car elle ne connaissait pas l'endroit. Une lionne la saisissant par la tunique de hère, avec ses dents, la conduisit jusqu'au rocher sur lequel se trouvait le corps. En apercevant son visage frais et souriant, comme si elle était en vie, elle la salua et alla raconter au grand anachorète Abraham, qui prit avec lui trois religieux et se rendit à l'endroit où se trouvait le corps; ils le soulevèrent, le transportèrent et l'enterrèrent dans le rocher qu'elle avait creusé pour elle-même. Il construisit sur le rocher une chapelle et un couvent, qui existe encore aujourd'hui.

Quant à Valérien, l'empereur idolâtre, il fit saisir l'évêque Athanase, dans la ville de Tarse, et le fit mettre en prison; car il apprit qu'il avait converti de nombreux idolâtres à la piété et les avait baptisés. Et lorsqu'il connut qu'il était inébranlable dans sa foi et ne voulait pas se convertir à l'idolâtrie, il ordonna de lui trancher la tête.

Un homme pieux fabriqua un tombeau en argent, y déposa le corps de saint Athanase et l'envoya à Jérusalem.

Aussitôt on leur trancha la tête, le 25 Août.

Adrien voyant une telle patience des saints, leur demanda sous serment : O hommes, quel est votre espoir de récompense pour tant de tourments? Les saints lui dirent : Ce que l'œil n'a pas vu, ce que l'oreille n'a pas entendu, et ce qui n'est pas monté au cœur de l'homme, ce que Dieu a préparé pour ceux qui l'aiment [1], qui acceptent le martyre pour son nom.

Alors Adrien animé du saint Esprit, se tenant au milieu des saints, dit au scribe : Inscris mon nom aussi, car moi aussi je suis chrétien et je meurs volontiers pour le Christ. Il se mêla ainsi au nombre des saints martyrs du Christ. On lui passa également des chaînes et on le détint avec les autres en prison.

Sa femme Natalie, ayant appris qu'on l'avait mis aux fers en prison, eut peur, déchira ses vêtements, et arracha les cheveux de sa tête. Mais lorsqu'elle sut que c'était pour la foi du Christ qu'il était détenu en prison, sa joie déborda, car elle était chrétienne. Elle changea de vêtements, se rendit à la prison, baisa les chaînes, et le raffermit en l'amour du Christ. Elle demanda aux autres saints de prier Dieu pour lui.

Quelques jours après, lorsqu'on était pour les conduire à l'interrogatoire, il donna en garantie aux geôliers les saints martyrs, et il se rendit chez lui pour avertir sa femme.

Natalie le voyant arriver, crut qu'il avait renié le Christ ou qu'il avait fui devant le peuple et les tortures. Elle ferma sa porte et ne lui permit pas d'entrer; et elle lui disait de l'intérieur : Va-t'en, renégat du Christ, second Judas; je m'étonnais d'être la femme d'un martyr.

Mais Adrien se réjouissait des paroles de Natalie, et lui dit doucement : Ce n'est pas comme tu dis, que je me sois sauvé ou que j'aie renié le Christ, loin de là. Je suis venu seulement prendre congé de toi, pour que tu viennes assister à notre exécution, comme je te l'avais promis avant. Lorsque Natalie l'eut entendu, elle ouvrit la porte, et ils se jetèrent dans les bras l'un de l'autre et se donnèrent le baiser et allèrent ensemble auprès des saints.

On conduisit Adrien en présence de l'empereur, et il confessa avec une hardiesse éclatante le nom de notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ. On le frappa longuement à coups de gros bâtons. frappa tant sur le ventre, qu'il s'entr'ouvrit laissant échapper les intestins. Il n'avait que vingt-huit ans et n'était marié à Natalie que depuis treize mois. Natalie le prit dans ses bras et le conduisit à la prison auprès des saints.

On défendit aux pieuses femmes l'accès de la prison. Natalie se fit couper les cheveux de la tête, prit un costume d'homme et pénétra dans la prison auprès des saints; elle lavait et pansait la plaie des blessures et encourageait son mari à supporter les tourments.

L'empereur ordonna de les tuer par l'épée. Alors Natalie pria le bourreau de commencer par Adrien, à briser les articulations du corps. Natalie saisit les pieds d'Adrien, les étendit sur l'enclume, et les bourreaux, usant de toutes leurs forces, séparèrent les pieds des genoux, de même les mains des bras, et aussitôt Adrien rendit son âme à Dieu le 26 Août.

On détacha également les pieds et les mains des autres saints comme on avait fait à Adrien. Et ils rendirent leur âme, en bonne confession, à Dieu.

Natalie prit en secret la main droite d'Adrien, la cacha dans son sein. On Un des officiers demanda Natalie en mariage, mais elle le trompa en disant : Attends quelques jours pour que je réfléchisse. Et elle alla près du lit de saint Adrien, pleura amèrement et pria le saint de la sauver des desseins des idolâtres.

Un des saints lui apparut et dit : Dieu a exaucé tes prières. Hâte-toi de venir à Byzance où nos restes reposent, et là, nous te visiterons. Natalie lui dit : Mon maître Adrien a-t-il comparu devant le Christ? Le saint répondit : Oui, il a comparu devant le Christ avant nous.

Aussitôt elle prit la main droite d'Adrien, s'embarqua et se sauva à Byzance. Mais l'officier qui voulait en mariage Natalie, s'embarqua sur un navire et pressait [les gens] de rejoindre [Natalie] et de la faire revenir. Un vent contraire s'éleva et le fit retourner en arrière. Pendant que Natalie naviguait, la nuit, l'esprit d'erreur dit au capitaine : Virez le navire à gauche et vous irez plus vite. Il songeait à faire revenir le vaisseau à Nicomédie. Alors apparut saint Adrien devant eux, sur le navire, et il dit : * Faites * A fol. 17 r° a. suivre votre navire après moi, car celui qui vous faisait virer à gauche, c'était le tentateur. Natalie le voyant, fut prise de joie et s'écria à haute voix : Voilà mon maître Adrien. Et elle ne le vit plus.

Aux jours de l'empereur Dioclétien, l'idolâtre, on saisit le martyr du Christ, Aboudimos, qui était chrétien de l'île de Ténédos. On l'obligea à renier le Christ, mais il ne consentit point; au contraire il confessa avec hardiesse la foi du christianisme.

On le lia à quatre poteaux et neuf bourreaux le soumirent à de cruelles tortures, et l'obligèrent à manger des abominables sacrifices des idoles, mais

A la sixième heure de la journée, le saint apparut, armé d'une épée, à l'empereur Dioclétien, et entouré d'anges terribles qui l'effrayèrent beaucoup et lui dirent : Regarde le serviteur de Dieu, Aboudimos, que tu croyais avoir tué; nous te le montrons par la puissance de Dieu, qu'après avoir été transporté de la terre, il est encore vivant et puissant contre les démons que tu adores. Il fut davantage irrité de cette vision des anges et ordonna de jeter au feu le corps de saint Aboudimos.

17 NAVASARD, 27 Août.

Fête des saints Hésychios et de ses compagnons.

Ils étaient de la maison royale des Alans, venus en Arménie à la suite de la reine Satinik, femme du roi Artachès. Ils devinrent les disciples des saints Oski et de ses compagnons ; ces derniers, disciples de l'apôtre Thaddée. Ils se retirèrent du palais de la reine et se rendirent à la montagne Soukave, et s'y firent religieux, se nourrissant d'herbes pendant vingt-quatre ans. On appelait leur chef Barakadre, qui prit le nom de Hésychios, à son baptême.

troupes au pays d'Arménie, pour les reconduire dans le pays des Alans, avec de grands honneurs s'ils revenaient aux idoles, et dans le cas contraire, de leur ôter la vie par l'épée.

Saint Hésychios raconta un songe aux frères : Un corbeau trempé dans le sang arrivait à nous du palais royal de notre pays, et voulait nous disperser comme de jeunes pigeons. Or, mettez-vous en prière et fortifiez-vous, afin que personne de nous ne se perde.

Barlaha arriva, les aperçut et en fut effrayé; car il les voyait semblables à des boucs sauvages, couverts de poil, et leurs corps paraissaient comme couverts de mousse, qui envahit les pierres, à cause de la rigueur du froid. Ils broutaient l'herbe comme des animaux. Il leur dit : Qu'êtes-vous? Les saints répondirent : Nous sommes des hommes, et de nationalité Alane. Le général leur dit : Revenez au culte des dieux et reprenez votre siège et vos honneurs, car je vous vois des gens forts et guerriers.

Saint Hésychios répondit : J'étais l'allié du roi Chapouh, et j'occupais le second trône; mais maintenant nous sommes les serviteurs de notre Dieu et le Ils prièrent Dieu de faire disparaître de la terre l'idolâtrie et d'accorder la guérison des diverses infirmités à ceux qui auraient recours à leur intercession. Une voix du ciel se fit entendre à eux : Venez, mes ascètes, dans le repos que je vous ai préparé, et recevez la couronne de votre vie ascétique; et à l'endroit où sera versé votre sang, la terre deviendra le remède de trois cent soixante-cinq maladies, selon les jours de l'année.

Le prince ordonna de les faire mourir par le glaive, et ils furent exécutés à la même heure : saint Hésychios, Lucianus, Polyeucte, Quadratus, Hosimus, Victor, Diognet, Mémas, Phocas, Sérius, Dimetius, Adrien, Thalès, Jourdan, Anastadès, Théodidos, Jacob, Théodore; et deux autres plus jeunes, à qui le glaive avait fait peur, partirent en secret à un autre endroit, se creusèrent un souterrain et y moururent dans la vie ascétique.

demeurèrent sans sépulture jusqu'aux jours du grand Grégoire l'Illuminateur, qui, par l'inspiration du Saint-Esprit, se rendit [sur les lieux], recueillit leurs restes et les inhuma à la même place. Il construisit en ce lieu un couvent et ordonna de célébrer chaque année leur mémoire partout.

Beaucoup de miracles se font à cet endroit, glorifiant ainsi quotidiennement la très sainte Trinité.

Ils habitaient la montagne Tsalkots, près des sources du fleuve Euphrate, et menaient une vie solitaire. Aux jours du roi Artachès ils se présentèrent au palais royal, entretinrent le roi et sa femme, la reine Satinik, qui était de la maison des Alans, de la doctrine de la foi du Christ.

Plusieurs parmi les notabilités, arrivés du pays des Alans avec la reine, crurent au Christ et se firent baptiser par eux. quarante-quatre ans, jusqu'aux jours du roi Gordien des Alans, qui, faisant faire le recensement de ses troupes, ne les trouva pas à leur rang d'honneur, au second siège d'Atha. Un certain nommé Sikerhère lui fit connaître qu'ils habitaient le pays d'Arménie, où ils pratiquaient la foi chrétienne.

Le roi envoya un certain Barlahaï avec des troupes pour les ramener avec honneur, mais s'ils ne consentaient point, de les exterminer par l'épée. Il se rendit à la montagne et les trouva dans la plus profonde vie ascétique. Il les interrogea longuement, les conjura par de douces paroles, mais les trouvant inébranlables en la foi du Christ, il médita, avec colère, de quelle mort les faire mourir.

Les bienheureux, s'étant réunis ensemble, prièrent unanimement pendant de longues heures. Le général, les voyant s'attarder dans la prière, commença par les menacer, et ordonna ensuite de planter quatre poteaux pour chacun d'eux, et de les y lier fortement et d'y mettre le feu, afin de brûler leur corps. Les saints, pendant leur supplice, se mirent à psalmodier. Il ordonna de leur mettre des mors à la bouche et de les frapper pour les empêcher de prier. Saint Quadratus, n'en tenant compte, les guida tous dans la prière et blâma la folie du général.

Le martyr du Christ saint Aternerseh était le fils de l'empereur de Rome, Probus. Après la mort de son père il devint chrétien et aspira à mourir pour le nom du Christ.

L'empereur de Nicomédie, Licinius, l'impie, vint à l'apprendre, lui qui journellement tuait plus de mille chrétiens, pour ne pas avoir renié le Christ et immolé aux idoles. Il [Aternerseh] se hâta d'accourir à Nicomédie et dit à Licinius avec hardiesse : Pourquoi fais-tu mourir sans les épargner tant de soldats romains, et fais-tu disparaître les plus fiers guerriers du pays? Les ennemis désormais entreront sans crainte à Rome et dévasteront et ruineront tout le pays. Licinius lui dit : Serais-tu aussi chrétien? Saint Aternerseh lui répondit : * Je prie beaucoup Dieu de me faire mourir en une telle confession. * A fol. 18 rº b.

Licinius se mit à lui parler avec bonté et lui donna des conseils avec douceur; il lui promettait des grandeurs, des honneurs et des présents. Il ne se laissa pas persuader. Alors il le menaça de tortures, de peines, et ne put le détourner. Il ordonna de lui trancher la tête; et il mourut ainsi en bonne confession du Christ, le 27 Août.

Domitius, l'évêque de Byzance, était le frère de saint Aternerseh. Il apprit le martyre du frère, s'embarqua pour Nicomédie et prit en secret les restes de son frère, qu'il emmena à Byzance, et déposa, avec grands honneurs, dans l'église où se trouvaient les reliques des saints Adrien et Natalie et des autres saints qui furent martyrisés avec lui.

Dans cette même église se trouvent également les restes du saint apôtre Stachyos, l'un des soixante-dix, que le saint apôtre André avait sacré évêque de Byzance.

Martyre des saints Straton, Philippus et Eutychianus.

Ces glorieux martyrs du Christ étaient de la ville de Nicomédie. Ils se rendirent un jour au théâtre pour assister aux jeux, où se trouvait rassemblée une foule compacte, et ils prêchèrent aux infidèles. Beaucoup crurent au Christ par leur doctrine, et revinrent du spectacle du théâtre. Et comme la foule devenait rare aux jeux, le prince demanda : Pourquoi le peuple s'en va-t-il et le théâtre reste-t-il vide? Plusieurs parmi les idolâtres lui répondirent : A

On jeta les saints aux bêtes fauves; elles ne les approchèrent point et ils sortirent indemnes du théâtre. On amena d'autres bêtes fauves et on les lâcha; elles ne les approchèrent pas non plus. Beaucoup parmi le peuple voyant que les bêtes sauvages avaient la crainte des saints, crurent au Christ. On alluma ensuite un grand feu et on y brûla les saints martyrs du Christ Straton, Philippus et Eutychianus le 28 Août, et ils furent transportés en bonne confession en la vie bienheureuse et immortelle.

Pendant qu'il était tout jeune, il quitta ses parents et se rendit à Éphèse. Il entra dans un couvent où il y avait sept cents moines; il se fit moine et se mortifia, avec une conduite agréable à Dieu, supérieure aux autres moines. Ses parents, à cause de leur grande tristesse et de leurs larmes incessantes pour avoir été privés de leur enfant, * devinrent aveugles et perdirent la vue. * A fol. 19 r° b.

En ces jours-là, il y eut une persécution des chrétiens par l'empereur Dioclétien, l'idolâtre. Tous les moines du couvent se dispersèrent. Le bienheureux Onésimus revint chez lui, vit ses parents aveugles, et ne se dévoila pas. Il leur dit simplement : Je sais où se trouve votre fils Onésimus.

La nuit, il écrivit sur une feuille qu'il était, lui, leur fils Onésimus; et le lendemain, il posa la feuille écrite sur la fenêtre et s'éloigna secrètement. Un de leurs voisins étant entré, aperçut le papier et le lut devant eux. Ils furent encore plus abattus et gémirent avec une tristesse inconsolable.

Le bienheureux Onésimus se rendit à Magnésie d'Asie, y construisit un couvent. Il apparut, dans un rêve, à ses parents, et les appela auprès de lui. Ils s'y rendirent. Il posa les mains sur leurs yeux et ils revirent la lumière et leur fils et rendirent grâce et gloire à Dieu.

Fête de la décollation du précurseur Jean qui baptisa le Christ (l'histoire est écrite en entier dans l'Évangile [1]).

Le précurseur du Christ Jean Baptiste vécut saintement dans le désert pendant trente ans. Ensuite, sur l'ordre de Dieu, il vint au Jourdain pour prêcher le baptême de la pénitence pour la rémission des péchés.

Les habitants de Jérusalem, de toute la Judée, de la Galilée et du pays qui avoisine le Jourdain, vinrent à lui pour se faire baptiser par lui et confesser leurs péchés. Il donna des conseils à tous, selon les besoins de chacun.

Jésus vint aussi de Galilée vers Jean pour être baptisé par lui, mais il s'en défendait en disant : C'est moi qui dois être baptisé par toi et tu viens à moi? Et Jésus dit : Laisse faire maintenant, car c'est ainsi qu'il convient que nous accomplissions toute justice.

1. Matth., xiv, 1-12; Marc, vi, 14-29.

Եւ ապա մկրտեաց զնա Յովհաննէս ։ Եւ բացան երկինք եւ Հոգին սուրբ մարմնաւոր տեսլեամբ իբրեւ զաղաւնի էջ ի վերայ Յիսուսի ։ Զի զայս նշան տուեալ էր հայր Յովհաննու զի. Յոյր վերայ տեսանիցես զհոգին զի իջանիցէ եւ հանգչիցի, նա է որդին Աստուծոյ ։ Եւ ձայն ի վերուստ որ ասէր. Դա՝ է որդի իմ սիրելի ընդ որ հաճեցայ ։

Եւ Յովհաննէս վկայեաց. Ահա գառն Աստուծոյ որ բառնայ զմեղս աշխարհի ։

Եկն եւ Հերովդէս չորրորդապետ՝ որդի Հերովդին առաջնոյ, որ զմանկունսն ի Բեղեհէմ * կոտորեաց, մկրտել ի Յովհաննէ ։ Եւ նա յանդիմանեաց զնա եւ ասէ. Զէ օրէն ունել քեզ զկին Փիլիպպոսի եղբօր քո մինչ նա կենդանի է եւ ունի զաւակ ի նմանէ ։ * A fol. 19 v° b.

Եւ դարձաւ Հերովդէս ի տուն իւր տրտմութեամբ, առ Հերովդիադա կին իւր, զոր յափշտակեալ էր անիրաւութեամբ ի Փիլիպպոսէ, եւ պատմեաց նմա զյանդիմանութիւնն Յովհաննու ։ Եւ նա խրատեաց զնա ունել եւ դնել ի բանտի ։

Alors Jean le baptisa, et le ciel s'ouvrit et l'Esprit-Saint, sous une forme corporelle, descendit comme une colombe sur Jésus. Car tel était le signe qu'avait donné le Père à Jean : Celui sur lequel tu verras l'Esprit descendre et se reposer, c'est lui le fils de Dieu. Et une voix d'en haut disait : Celui-ci est mon fils bien-aimé en qui j'ai mis mes complaisances.

Et Jean rendit ce témoignage : Voici l'Agneau de Dieu qui ôte le péché du monde.

Vint aussi Hérode, le tétrarque, fils d'Hérode le premier, qui massacra les * Innocents à Bethléem, pour se faire baptiser par Jean. Mais celui-ci lui fit des reproches et dit : Il ne t'est pas permis d'avoir la femme de ton frère Philippe, tandis qu'il est encore en vie, et qu'il a un enfant d'elle. * A fol. 19 v° b.

Hérode revint chez lui plein de tristesse, auprès d'Hérodiade sa femme, qu'il avait enlevée injustement à Philippe, et lui raconta les reproches de Jean. Elle lui conseilla de le saisir et de le mettre en prison.

Un jour, Hérode donna un grand festin à ses officiers, aux grands de sa cour, et leur fit boire des vins vieux; tous s'enivrèrent. On fit appeler la fille d'Hérodiade. Elle vint effrontément avec des yeux peints, des joues fardées, les cheveux arrangés avec art, des vêtements ornés de diverses couleurs et des souliers brodés. Elle s'inclina devant le roi et les convives, battit des mains

Alors tous les convives se mirent à prier le roi, pour que le Juste ne mourût point, pour des prétextes de péché. Mais le roi impie ne voulut mentir à son serment, et envoya aussitôt un bourreau pour qu'il tranchât la tête et l'apportât au roi.

Le bourreau se rendit à la prison et y trouva Jean en prières. Le bourreau se mit à pleurer tout en tremblant. Jean l'appela à lui et lui demanda la raison de sa mort. Il lui raconta tout avec détail. Et le bourreau ajouta : Je suis dans les transes, ô saint de Dieu! si je te tue, je crains ton Dieu; et si je ne te tue pas, le roi me tuera. Mais je préfère mourir que de verser ton sang saint. Jean lui dit : Approche, mon fils, prends ma tête, car je suis né par un tressaillement et je meurs par la danse.

Le bourreau saisit la sainte tête de Jean et l'apporta au roi. A cette vue, Athanasius, subirent le martyre pour le Christ et furent classés parmi les anges au ciel. Le saint évêque Philonidis resta seul en prison.

Un certain temps après, le prince impie, Maximus, ordonna que le corps de tout chrétien qui ne consentirait pas à renier le Christ et à immoler aux idoles, fût livré à toutes les infamies d'hommes débauchés et infâmes, pour le souiller.

Le saint évêque Philonidis ne trouva pas moyen d'échapper à l'infâme souillure. Il se rendit à un endroit élevé, se mit à genoux et pria avec beaucoup de larmes; ensuite il ôta ses vêtements, s'en couvrit le visage et la tête et se précipita de haut en bas. Avant d'arriver au sol il rendit son âme, le 30 Août.

Les impies mirent son corps dans un sac et le jetèrent à la mer. Les flots de la mer le déposèrent sur la plage. Des voyageurs de pays lointain y passaient. Le saint évêque accourant au-devant * d'eux, leur apparut dans sa * A fol. 21 rº a.

Il disait : Plus vous ajoutez aux tortures, plus vous m'amassez des biens au ciel.

Lorsqu'il arriva à la porte, il prit du sang qui se répandait de son corps, fit le signe de la croix sur le front et sur le cœur et pria Dieu. Une voix du ciel se fit entendre à lui qui disait : Tatianus, monte au ciel, car

21 NAVASARD, 31 Août.

Découverte de la précieuse ceinture de la très sainte mère de Dieu, qui se trouve à Constantinople, à l'endroit qui s'appelle Chalcopratiae.

La ceinture de la très sainte Vierge Marie, mère de Dieu, trouvée à Jérusalem par miracle, fut transportée dans la ville royale de Constantinople.

Toute la ville se porta à sa rencontre avec des torches et des cierges allumés et on la déposa avec honneur dans la glorieuse église de la mère de Dieu, appelée Chalcopratiae. On établit ce jour-là grande fête au nom de la sainte mère de Dieu, le 31 Août.

En ce jour, martyre de sainte Photine, dont le nom signifie lumineuse.

C'est la femme samaritaine à qui le Christ demanda de l'eau au puits de Jacob. Elle crut au Christ, se rendit à Carthage, dans la ville d'Afrique, y fut baptisée et reçut le nom de Photine. Elle prêchait à tous le nom de notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ, et instruisait bon nombre d'idolâtres.

Elle partit pour Jérusalem et prit soin du tombeau de notre Seigneur. Elle entendit les apôtres Pierre et Paul, devint leur disciple et enseignait

Elle partit pour la ville de Rome et là aussi elle enseigna à haute voix au peuple, de renier les idoles et de croire au Christ.

L'empereur Néron, l'idolâtre, l'apprit. Il envoya des soldats pour la découvrir. Ils se saisirent de la bienheureuse Photine et la mirent en sa présence; ils discutèrent ensemble pendant de longues heures, mais il ne parvint pas à la fléchir, ni par supplications, ni par menaces.

Il ordonna de lui couper, avec l'épée, les mains; lorsqu'on les posa sur l'enclume, les bourreaux se mirent à frapper vigoureusement avec l'épée, de la troisième heure de la journée jusqu'à la sixième heure, mais n'arrivèrent pas à lui couper les mains. Néron ordonna alors de lui détacher les mains avec des marteaux. Les bourreaux s'employèrent beaucoup, les marteaux se brisèrent et ils ne parvinrent pas, quand même, à lui détacher les mains.

On alluma ensuite un grand feu et on y jeta la servante du Christ. On la laissa trois jours dans le feu, elle n'y brûla point. On la fit sortir du feu, et on lui fit boire par deux fois du poison mortel, elle n'eut aucun mal. On fit fondre du plomb qu'on lui versa dans la bouche, et qui descendit comme de l'eau fraîche dans l'estomac.

Ensuite on la suspendit * à un arbre, on lui déchira le corps, le sang coula abondamment à terre; il [Néron] ordonna de lui passer des fers rougis sur les blessures des plaies et de lui introduire dans les narines de la cendre de four mêlée à du vinaigre. Lorsqu'on la descendit de l'arbre, on lui creva les deux yeux et on la transporta dans une prison obscure et infecte, où se trouvaient des serpents et des reptiles venimeux. Dans la même nuit, le Seigneur descendit du ciel avec Paul et Pierre, il se fit une grande clarté dans la prison et une odeur douce s'y répandit; Il s'approcha de ses yeux, les guérit et elle vit le Seigneur. * A fol. 21 v° b.

Et Photine dit : Aie pitié de ta servante, Seigneur, et donne grâce à mon nom et à mes os; et ceux qui pâtissent des yeux et te prieront en mon nom et auront recours à mon intercession, guéris-les et illumine leurs yeux. Le Seigneur promit d'exaucer ses vœux. Et jusqu'aujourd'hui, ceux qui souffrent des yeux et prient Dieu et sa sainte martyre Photine guérissent aussitôt et recouvrent la vue.

On abandonna en prison, après les tortures, pendant trois ans, la bienheureuse femme; elle n'eut jamais faim, ni soif, ni froid, il n'y eut jamais d'obscu-* rité ni d'odeurs infectes dans la prison. Trois ans après, elle s'endormit dans le Christ. * A fol. 22 r° a.

Lorsque notre reine glorieuse par-dessus tout, la vraie vierge et mère de Dieu, proclamée bienheureuse par toutes les générations, Marie, était sur le point d'être transportée pour aller trouver Celui qui était né d'elle selon la chair, le Seigneur et Dieu Jésus-Christ, elle ordonna de donner ses deux vêtements à deux pauvres veuves, que d'autres disent deux vierges. Une d'elles prit, avec le vêtement, aussi la sainte ceinture et la conserva avec soin et vénération. Quant aux deux vêtements, chacune conserva l'un d'eux près d'elle, et ils les transmirent de génération en génération et les confièrent à d'autres vierges parentes secrètement comme dépôt. De même celle qui possédait la ceinture, la transmit à d'autres, qui la conservèrent avec tous les soins, la transmettant de génération en génération.

Et lorsque par la providence divine, le manteau de la même reine fut apporté de Capernaoum à Constantinople par les soins de deux patriciens Albion et Candidus, sous le règne du grand Léon, la sainte ceinture de notre reine fut ensuite découverte par l'évêque de Zila, sous le règne du pieux Justinien, et déposée comme un trésor à Chalcopratiae. C'est ainsi que ces dons divins furent offerts à la ville royale, dédiée à la même reine, la mère de Dieu, par le pieux Constantin, son fondateur.

épîtres de l'apôtre Paul, et il apprit d'un vieillard zélé qu'elles étaient écrites pour le salut des âmes.

Aussitôt secrètement de ses parents il se rendit dans un couvent et se fit religieux. Il y vivait dans un tel ascétisme, qu'il ne se hâtait même pas d'aller manger à sa faim, et servait inlassablement ses frères, à leur grande édification.

Un jour qu'il était allé au puits, il y trouva une corde de crin, et à l'insu de tous il se devêtit, et en entoura tout son corps, en se serrant à tel point que [la corde] s'enfonça jusqu'aux os. Son corps pourrit, fut rongé par les vers et une odeur infecte se dégagea de son corps. Lorsque les frères l'apprirent, ils eurent toute la peine à dégager avec de l'eau chaude la corde l'abbé du couvent en le menaçant s'il ne retrouvait pas le serviteur de Dieu. Il envoya aussitôt des religieux, qui le trouvèrent dans le puits très profond et, l'en ayant retiré, le conduisirent au couvent. Il y demeura quelques jours, et se rendit dans un désert; il s'y fabriqua un abri étroit et y demeura quatre ans; il ne se nourrissait que de lentilles mouillées.

Il construisit ensuite une colonne élevée de la terre de quatre coudées, y monta et y demeura sept ans. Par ses prières il guérissait beaucoup de malades et leur enseignait à accomplir la volonté de Dieu et à sauver leur âme.

Après vingt-sept ans, sa mère, ayant entendu parler de lui, alla le voir, mais ne le put, car le bienheureux Siméon ne le lui permit pas. En ces jours, quelques chasseurs ayant aperçu une biche, la poursuivirent, sans pouvoir l'atteindre. Ils jurèrent à la biche, sur les prières de Siméon, de ne pas lui faire du mal. La biche s'arrêta à cause du serment. Les chasseurs la saisirent, la tuèrent et la mangèrent. Aussitôt toutes leurs dents tombèrent dans leur bouche. Ils se repentirent, allèrent trouver le bienheureux, chacun tenant ses dents dans la main, et avouèrent ce qu'ils avaient fait à la biche. Le bienheureux, après avoir prié, leur ordonna de remettre leurs dents dans la bouche, et ils furent aussitôt guéris, car toutes les dents se fixèrent à leur place.

A l'époque des Iconoclastes, on jeta dans le lac dit Zagourou la bienheureuse image de l'immaculée mère de Dieu, tenant dans ses bras notre Dieu comme enfant, [image] peinte sur bois et qui se trouvait au couvent dit Miasinon. Le bois s'y conserva incorruptible pendant de longues années, et les couleurs délicates n'eurent à souffrir aucune détérioration.

Plus tard, le premier de Septembre, par la volonté de la même mère de Dieu, un rayon jaillit du ciel au-dessus de cet endroit, et y fit découvrir l'image, qui apparut glorieusement sur la surface des eaux. Lorsqu'on la sortit [des eaux], elle opéra de nombreux miracles sur toutes les personnes affligées qui y approchèrent avec foi, pour la gloire de Dieu éternellement béni.

Après avoir confessé le Christ et subi de nombreuses tortures, elles furent jetées dans la fournaise enflammée et on trancha la tête à huit d'entre elles; à dix autres on leur ouvrit et fendit les seins; à d'autres on enfonça des broches rougies dans la bouche; on posa un casque de fer enflammé sur la tête du diacre Ammonne. C'est ainsi qu'ils moururent pour le Christ.

En ce même jour, commémoration de l'ouverture du ciel et de la vision de l'apôtre saint Paul, que raconte le divin Luc dans les Actes des apôtres, de celui qui plus tard fut transporté au paradis et au troisième ciel et qui entendit des choses ineffables.

tomba malade en prison et y mourut en bonne confession [de foi]. Les jours de grossesse de la pieuse Rufina s'étant accomplis, elle mit au monde un fils dans la prison. Elle mourut également en bonne profession de foi, et on la sortit et on l'enterra auprès de son mari.

Une femme chrétienne de nom Matrone, inspirée par Dieu, enleva l'enfant de la prison et l'éleva dans la foi chrétienne. Lorsqu'il fut âgé d'un an, Matrone le tenant dans ses bras, l'embrassa, et l'enfant cria et dit : Mama ; d'où on l'appela Mamas au baptême. L'enfant ayant grandi, elle l'envoya à l'école. Il y apprit les lettres et lui-même enseignait à ses compagnons d'école d'avoir à éviter la vaine idolâtrie, et croire au Dieu vivant, qui est au ciel.

Lorsqu'il eut quinze ans, le gouverneur Dimocrates ayant entendu parler de Mamas, le fit venir en sa présence et lui demanda s'il était chrétien. Il confessa ouvertement le Christ. Le gouverneur l'envoya chez Arianos juge de la ville d'Édesse, qui ordonna aux bourreaux de battre le bienheureux avec des bâtons. Ensuite ils brûlèrent son corps par le feu, et vu la fermeté de sa volonté on lui attacha de lourds plombs au cou, pour le jeter au fond de la mer. Il échappa, par l'aide de Dieu, aux mains des bourreaux et se rendit sur une montagne qui se trouvait près de Césarée, où il se cacha quarante jours, priant incessamment.

tiens persécutés y avaient laissé en secret, Mamas le prit avec joie et le baisa. Il construisit en cet endroit un autel, et les fauves venaient se réunir auprès de lui. Il allait traire les biches, fabriquait du fromage et le distribuait aux pauvres et aux orphelins. Il vivait sur la montagne, rempli de vertus, veillait toujours en prières et se mortifiait par le jeûne; il ne se nourrissait que des fruits de la montagne.

Il possédait une voix superbe comme celle de David, qui calmait Saül, car il chantait incessamment [des cantiques] à Dieu. Il calmait les souffrances du corps de tous ceux qui allaient le trouver par ses suaves mélodies et son aspect angélique dont il resplendissait; car il était comme un ange sans corps, orné de vertus célestes. Il avait souvent des visions divines et par l'inspiration céleste, il prenait les forces pour mépriser la vie matérielle et s'attacher aux choses invisibles.

Les cerfs et les biches se rassemblaient auprès de lui, d'abord à cause des sources qui se trouvaient aux alentours, et ensuite parce qu'ils y trouvaient refuge, des fauves et des chasseurs qui ne pouvaient plus leur faire du mal. Le saint les gardait; les bêtes y mettaient bas dans les lieux proches, et il allait les traire et distribuait le produit aux pauvres. Ce que voyant, les bergers descendirent de la montagne, racontèrent aux autres et beaucoup de gens se rendirent auprès de lui pour le voir et crurent au Christ par la doctrine du saint.

Les prêtres des idoles, rendus jaloux, allèrent trouver le juge Alexandre, et lui dénoncèrent le saint comme étant sorcier et attirant à lui, par magie, les bêtes sauvages. Il ordonna de le faire descendre de la montagne. Les soldats allèrent le trouver, le saint leur offrit des fruits et du fromage qu'ils mangèrent.

Lorsqu'ils l'eurent conduit au tribunal, le juge interrogea le saint, qui répondit avec sagesse et affirma la divinité du Christ, sans craindre ses menaces. Alors on l'étendit à terre et on le frappa cruellement, après quoi on le mit en prison. Ensuite on le lia et on lui déchira les côtes, et on le frotta avec du sel et une grosse toile jusqu'aux membres intimes; on tira avec force sur les mains et sur les bras du saint et on lui brisa les articulations. On lança ensuite contre lui un grand ours et un lion, mais qui, par les soins de Dieu, ne lui causèrent aucun mal. De nombreux impies, par ordre du juge, se rassemblèrent pour lapider le saint; et pendant qu'on lui jetait des pierres, un athlète le frappa avec un trident tranchant et lui fit sortir les entrailles. Le saint se rendit sur un rocher, hors de la ville de Césarée; le sang lui sortait du corps comme une source, il rendit grâce et bénit Dieu. Du haut du ciel l'invitation de Dieu lui notifia son appel au royaume de Dieu et il en fut consolé en son âme. Mamas, les yeux levés au ciel, en instance de prières ferventes rendit l'âme entre les mains de Dieu.

Martyre de saint Anthimus, évêque de Nicomédie.

Aux jours de l'empereur Maximien, l'impie, le saint évêque Anthimus se trouvait dans les montagnes * de Nicomédie. L'empereur ayant entendu parler de lui, envoya des soldats pour l'amener de la montagne, chargé de chaînes.

* A fol. 24 v° b.

En route, il enseigna les soldats à abandonner les idoles et à servir le Dieu vrai. Et ils crurent à Dieu et se firent baptiser.

Ce que l'empereur ayant appris, il envoya d'autres soldats qui amenèrent saint Anthimus les mains liées derrière le dos. Il le questionna longuement. Anthimus confessa avec hardiesse le Christ. Il ordonna de lui frapper le cou avec des pierres, et de lui brûler les pieds avec des pointes de fer rougies, ensuite on l'étendit par terre et on lui brisa les reins et les membres avec de gros bâtons. On lui passa des chaussures en fer et on lui cloua les pieds.

L'empereur tyran voyant qu'il n'avait eu aucun mal par les tortures, qu'au contraire il répondait sans crainte, entra dans une grande colère, déchira son manteau qu'il portait, et ordonna de clouer le saint à une roue ; le corps fut brisé par des glaives rougis au feu. Le saint s'étant mis à prier, la roue cessa de tourner, et les clous rougis au feu jaillirent de la roue et beaucoup d'entre les bourreaux en furent brûlés.

On flagella de nouveau le saint et on le jeta en prison. Le saint, dans la prison, enseigna sans relâche les détenus et les raffermissait dans la foi du Christ, il les baptisait et les bénissait.

Quelques jours après, on introduisit le saint en présence de l'empereur. Il reprocha avec hardiesse au tyran sa folie. Aussitôt celui-ci donna l'ordre de lui trancher la tête par l'épée. Lorsqu'on l'eut conduit à l'endroit de l'exécution, il se mit à prier Dieu. Après la prière, on lui trancha la tête.

ceux qui se trouvaient dans les prisons, d'aucuns en personne et ouvertement et d'autres par écrit et secrètement; il convertit et offrit à Dieu nombre de personnes notables jusque dans la maison même de l'empereur.

Tout en habitant dans une hutte à la montagne, il encouragea tous les saints au nombre de vingt mille, qu'il groupa ensemble dans l'espoir de les offrir en sacrifice à Dieu. Il fit beaucoup de miracles et de nombreuses conversions.

Aussi on le dénonça à l'empereur, qui envoya des soldats pour ramener le bienheureux de la montagne, chargé de liens. Saint Anthimus les reçut, leur offrit d'abord à manger et se dévoila ensuite à eux en disant : C'est moi Anthimus. Ils furent saisis de profond respect, devant son humilité et à son aspect plein de grâces divines, car il était d'une grande beauté, et rempli des grâces de Dieu. C'est pourquoi ils le prièrent de ne pas se rendre avec eux et dirent : Nous nous chargeons d'aller déclarer ne point t'avoir trouvé, et tu resteras ici et tu prieras pour nous. Le saint n'y consentit point et se rendit de sa propre volonté avec eux. Chemin faisant il enseigna aux soldats à renoncer aux idoles et à adorer Dieu. Ils se convertirent au Christ, furent baptisés, et martyrisés ensuite avec lui.

L'empereur, ayant appris ces faits, envoya d'autres soldats qui emmenèrent saint Anthimus les mains liées derrière le dos. L'empereur l'interrogea longuement et Anthimus confessa avec hardiesse le Christ. Il ordonna alors de le Ensuite on l'étendit par terre et on lui brisa les reins et les membres à coups de gros bâtons. On lui cloua aux pieds, avec de longs clous, des chaussures de fer enflammées. On étendit ensuite sous lui du verre réduit en menus morceaux sur lesquels on traîna le saint, et on le frappa cruellement avec de gros bâtons.

Le tyran, voyant qu'il était encore en vie et répondait sans crainte, entra dans une grande colère, déchira son manteau qu'il portait. Il ordonna de clouer le saint à une roue, et de lui déchirer tout le corps avec des glaives rougis au feu. Ensuite on délia le saint des liens de la roue, on reprit à le flageller, et on le mit en prison. En prison, le saint enseigna sans relâche les détenus et les fortifiait dans la foi du Christ, il les baptisait et les bénissait.

Quelques jours après, on introduisit le saint auprès de l'empereur; il reprocha avec hardiesse la folie du tyran, qui donna l'ordre aussitôt de lui trancher la tête par l'épée. Lorsqu'on l'eut conduit à l'endroit du supplice, il se mit à prier le Seigneur. Après la prière, on trancha la tête au bienheureux.

Martyre de Babylas, patriarche d'Antioche, et de ses trois disciples.

Le saint patriarche d'Antioche Babylas vivait au temps de l'empereur Numérianus, l'impie. Un jour que l'empereur tyran * voulut pénétrer dans l'église pour insulter les chrétiens, le saint patriarche s'y opposa et ne lui permit pas d'entrer, disant : Tu n'es pas digne avec ta profession de foi impure et tes œuvres mauvaises de pénétrer dans la maison du Seigneur Dieu.

* A fol. 25 r° b.

Quelques jours après, le roi manda le bienheureux Babylas, et par des paroles douces lui conseilla de renier le Christ et d'adorer les idoles. Le saint ouvrit la bouche et par sa théologie confondit avec force injures l'idolâtrie de l'empereur. Celui-ci entra en colère, ordonna de lui passer des chaînes au cou et aux pieds et de le traîner, en sa présence, à travers la ville, au vu de tous les chrétiens. L'empereur dit ensuite au saint : Je jure par mes dieux que ce collier te va très bien. Le saint répondit : Il me va aussi bien, ô roi, que la couronne sur ta tête ne te sied autant le saint culte chrétien. Ce qu'ayant entendu, les fidèles songèrent à sortir et à s'échapper de l'église. Mais saint Babylas, après beaucoup d'exhortations, les encouragea et les retint à l'église, et lui, s'étant assis devant la porte, il ne permit point à l'impie de pénétrer à l'intérieur, et dit : Tu n'es pas digne d'entrer dans la maison de Dieu avec tes mains immondes et baignées de sang. L'empereur indigné ordonna de lui mettre des fers au cou et aux pieds et de l'éloigner. On exécuta aussitôt l'ordre de l'impie et on traîna le saint patriarche à travers la ville à la vue de tout le monde.

Le saint patriarche avait élevé trois enfants; il leur avait enseigné le culte de Dieu. Le tyran ordonna de les amener en sa présence, et avec eux leur mère qui s'appelait Théodula. Il leur demanda : De quelle religion êtes-vous?

C'est alors qu'arrivèrent les trois jeunes garçons qui avaient été ses disciples et que le saint patriarche avait élevés, en leur enseignant les saintes Écritures et les usages du culte de Dieu; ils embrassèrent ses chaînes et ne voulurent pas se séparer de lui. Ce qu'ayant appris, Numérianus ordonna de faire venir en sa présence ces enfants et ensuite leur mère Théodule. L'empereur lui dit : Sont-ils vraiment tes fils? Elle répondit : Oui, c'est moi qui les ai mis au monde, mais je les ai remis entre les mains du saint patriarche Babylas. Il les a fait naître d'une nouvelle naissance sur les saints fonts du baptême et il leur a enseigné la foi et le culte de Dieu.

A ces paroles, l'empereur entra en colère; il ordonna à des hommes de charger sur leur dos chacun un des garçons et de leur appliquer des coups de lanières, selon le nombre d'années de leur âge. Car ayant demandé, il apprit de leur mère que l'aîné avait douze ans, le second neuf et le troisième sept.

Et lorsqu'on les eut frappés autant de fois qu'ils avaient d'années, les enfants dirent unanimement : Béni soit Dieu, car nous souffrons pour lui.

L'empereur ordonna de faire venir également Babylas et le contraignit à céder et à immoler aux idoles, sous menaces de diverses tortures et de mort. Mais vu la fermeté de sa foi, avec laquelle il confessait hardiment la très sainte Trinité et méprisait les vains usages et la folie du culte de leurs démons, il ordonna de pendre en haut à un arbre saint Babylas, et avec lui, les trois frères, et de les torturer longuement.

Et lorsqu'on eut déchiré avec des onglets de fer les côtes de saint Babylas et qu'on l'eut soumis à d'impossibles tortures, on lui fit fortes promesses dans l'espoir de le convertir aux idoles; mais il les repoussa avec indignation par des réponses pleines de sagesse admirable.

Et lorsqu'on eut décidé de lui trancher la tête, saint Babylas les conjura, ainsi qu'il l'avait dit devant l'empereur, de l'enterrer avec ses chaînes. Ce qui fut fait.

Plus tard, lorsque Julien se rendit à Antioche, et descendit à l'endroit où saint Babylas était enterré, il se mit à demander des oracles aux démons; tous les démons furent réduits au silence par le saint, les idoles ne pouvaient plus influencer les mages, et [les démons] n'osaient plus s'approcher de l'endroit ou inspirer les devins.

Julien ayant reconnu que la défaite était due aux vertus des saints restes, fit enlever le saint du lieu et le fit transporter en ville, sur quoi toute la ville d'Antioche eut une grande joie, car de nombreuses guérisons eurent lieu. Et le saint corps fut trouvé avec les chaînes dans un état intact, non décomposé, entouré des chaînes, comme il l'avait ordonné à l'heure de mourir.

Et lorsqu'il fut exécuté, saint Babylas pria les bourreaux de trancher la tête d'abord aux enfants et après à lui, et la mère des enfants enterra les quatre dans une même tombe, y mettant aussi les chaînes, comme le saint l'avait ordonné.

Le saint patriarche d'Antioche Babylas et les trois enfants moururent le 25 Navasard, le 4 Septembre.

En ce jour mourut également par l'épée un autre Babylas, maître d'école fort âgé, dans la ville de Nicomédie, avec ses quatre-vingt-quatre élèves tous enfants.

Le saint vieillard et martyr le prêtre Babylas était, dans la ville de Nicomédie, ministre de l'église de Dieu. Il prêchait à tous l'évangile et faisait de nombreuses conversions au Christ, car il était fort dans la science des saintes Écritures.

Lorsque l'empereur Maximien vint à Nicomédie pour y persécuter les chrétiens, il entra dans le temple des idoles, pour y offrir des victimes. A la sortie, les prêtres lui dirent : Seigneur, empereur, tu adores les dieux, mais il y a ici un vieillard de nom Babylas qui adore le crucifié et méprise les idoles. Il rassemble beaucoup de jeunes enfants à l'école et leur enseigne le culte et la science de la doctrine chrétienne; il convertit toute notre ville, car il enseigne cette doctrine non seulement aux garçons, mais aux filles également.

Maximien fit venir en sa présence Babylas, qui confessa le Christ. Sur son ordre on lui brisa avec des pierres la figure et le visage et tous les os de son corps, on lui brisa les jambes, les mâchoires, les épaules et les reins. On lui passa un collier de fer au cou; et il rendait grâce au Christ. L'empereur ordonna de le mettre en prison chargé de lourdes chaînes et de lui mettre ses pieds dans le bloc.

Il ordonna de faire venir en sa présence les saints enfants, ses élèves, qui fréquentaient son école. On lui présenta quatre-vingt-quatre enfants garçons et filles. Il chercha à les séduire par de bonnes paroles. Mais ils lui dirent : Nous sommes chrétiens et n'immolons point aux idoles. Il sépara des autres dix garçons qui paraissaient plus avancés que les autres et chercha à les tromper. Mais eux aussi confessèrent avec hardiesse le Christ. Sur quoi il ordonna de les frapper sur les épaules et les reins jusqu'à ce que la terre fût baignée de leur sang.

Ensuite il fit venir les autres, leur demanda : Qu'avez-vous à dire et que pensez-vous faire? Ils jetèrent unanimement leurs vêtements à terre et accoururent au supplice en criant : Nous sommes chrétiens. L'empereur, en courroux, les remit au juge Priscilien pour les soumettre à de cruelles tortures.

Celui-ci les fit mettre en prison et les ayant gardés de longues journées sans nourriture, les fit venir au tribunal avec Babylas. Il les trouva fermes dans la foi du Christ. A cause de cela il fit étendre Babylas à terre, retenu par quatre hommes, ainsi que les autres, et les fit frapper avec des nerfs de bœuf sur les reins et les plantes des pieds. Ils bénissaient le Christ. Ce qui rendit furieux le juge qui ordonna de leur percer les chevilles des pieds et les jambes; de leur briser les épaules et de leur trancher ensuite, à tous, la tête, à Babylas et à ses quatre-vingt-quatre élèves enfants, qui intercèdent pour nous auprès du Seigneur.

vierge religieuse, nommée Celsine, et autres vierges, vêtues de cilice, au nombre de quarante. Il chercha à les tromper et leur conseillait avec de douces paroles de renier le Christ et de revenir aux idoles. Les saintes vierges n'y consentirent pas; au contraire, elles insultèrent les idoles et le juge, et quittant le lieu se rendirent à la maison de sainte Celsine.

Elle fit appeler le diacre Ammonne qui les raffermit toutes dans la foi du Christ. Elles décidèrent de subir les tortures pour celui qui fut tourmenté pour nous. Et s'encourageant mutuellement, elles se rendirent ensemble au-devant du juge, confessèrent le Christ et prièrent Dieu. Aussitôt les idoles tombèrent et furent réduites en miettes. Le prêtre resta suspendu en l'air et fut maltraité par des anges qui avaient la forme de feu.

On transporta les saintes vierges et le diacre Ammonne à la ville d'Héraclée, en Thrace, et le Seigneur leur apparut et les fortifia. S'étant rendues à l'endroit où l'évêque Domitianus avait déposé les restes de la sainte martyre, ils y prièrent toute la nuit. Et sainte Glycérie leur apparut en une vision et leur dit : Soyez les bienvenues, servantes du Christ et mes chères compagnes, qui aimez Dieu. Je vous attendais depuis bien longtemps, afin que nous jouissions ensemble du royaume de Dieu et que nous fassions partie du chœur des anges, couronnées par le Christ.

Elles prédirent devant le juge la mort de l'empereur Licinius, la conversion au culte de Dieu de l'empereur Constantin, l'invention de la sainte Croix, la construction des églises * et la ruine de l'idolâtrie. * A fol. 26 v° a.

Le juge ordonna d'allumer un feu et d'y jeter les saintes vierges. Après avoir prié de longues heures, dix vierges pénétrèrent dans le feu, y glorifièrent Dieu avec joie; elles invitèrent les autres dans la fournaise, qui entrèrent toutes volontiers dans le feu et, comme d'une seule bouche, bénirent Dieu. Aussitôt le feu se changea, pour elles, en une brise et une rosée. Quelques-unes d'elles moururent par le feu. On trancha la tête à d'autres, et à d'autres on introduisit des broches rougies dans la bouche jusqu'à la gorge et toutes moururent dans le Christ.

Plusieurs pieuses personnes inhumèrent les restes des saintes dans des lieux renommés.

Les saintes vierges et le diacre Ammonne moururent le 5 Septembre.

Le divin Zacharie, qui était grand prêtre et père du prophète Jean-Baptiste, comme en témoigne le divin évangile, était juste ainsi que sa femme Élisabeth. Ils accomplissaient toutes les lois et les commandements du Seigneur sans tache. Ils vivaient au temps d'Hérode, roi du pays des Juifs.

Il était vieillard et sa femme stérile, sans enfant. C'est à lui, à Zacharie, que l'archange Gabriel annonça, lorsqu'il se trouvait dans le saint des saints, et y brûlait des encens pour la rémission des péchés du peuple : Le Seigneur a exaucé tes prières et ta femme Élisabeth te donnera un enfant.

Comme il en doutait, l'ange le confondit et le rendit muet et il ne put plus parler, jusqu'à ce qu'Élisabeth eût enfanté Jean. Et lorsqu'on était pour donner un nom à l'enfant, il demanda une tablette et écrivit : Son nom est Jean. Sa bouche s'ouvrit alors et sa langue se délia.

Lorsque Hérode massacrait les Innocents de Bethléem, il chercha aussi à faire mourir Jean. Mais Élisabeth prit l'enfant et s'enfuit au désert. Les bourreaux l'ayant rejointe, voulaient tuer l'enfant. Mais par les soins de Dieu, l'enfant échappa avec la mère, cachés dans une grotte de la montagne, jusqu'à ce que les bourreaux fussent rentrés les mains vides. Jean fut ensuite élevé dans la solitude auprès des bergers. Élisabeth, étant retournée, finit les jours de sa vie en paix.

Mais Zacharie fut livré aux mains du roi Hérode, et fut tué entre le temple et l'autel; son corps fut jeté dans un fossé profond, que de pieuses personnes retirèrent, et enterrèrent dans le tombeau de ses pères. D'autres ramassèrent son sang dans de petites fioles et sur du linge.

Aux jours de saint Grégoire, notre Illuminateur, il fut apporté en Arménie du sang de saint Zacharie, contenu dans une petite fiole, en même temps qu'une partie des restes du médecin Pantaléon, qui fut martyrisé dans la ville de Nicomédie aux jours de l'empereur Maximien, l'impie, et que saint Grigoris, le petit-fils de saint Grégoire l'Illuminateur, emporta avec lui dans le pays de l'Albanie, et lorsqu'il y mourut, martyrisé, les fidèles les déposèrent dans son tombeau.

Ensuite, aux jours de Vatchacan, le pieux roi de l'Albanie, on découvrit les restes de saint Grégoris, catholicos de l'Albanie, et avec eux le sang de Zacharie et une partie des ossements de Pantaléon, d'où s'opérèrent beaucoup de miracles et la guérison des maux en la gloire du Christ notre Dieu.

En ce jour, commémoration de l'autre prophète Zacharie, l'ancien.

Yoas, roi de Juda, fit mettre à mort pendant qu'il priait dans le temple des sacrifices, et répandit son sang dans la maison de David, au milieu de la maison et sur Elama. Les prêtres l'enterrèrent auprès de son père à Jérusalem.

En ce jour, martyre des quarante saintes vierges, vêtues de cilice, Celsine et autres et du diacre Ammonne.

Ces saintes femmes vivaient aux jours de l'empereur Licinius, l'impie, dans le pays de Thrace, dans la ville d'Adrianople. Il y avait là-bas un juge impie, de nom Vavdos, qu'on appelait aussi Bardos.

Ayant appris qu'il s'y trouvait des chrétiens, il fit venir la plus influente femme de la ville, religieuse vierge, appelée Celsine, et d'autres vierges religieuses, qui s'étaient vêtues de cilice, au nombre de quarante, et chercha à les tromper par de douces paroles, les exhortant à renier le Christ et à croire aux idoles. Les vierges saintes ne consentirent point; au contraire, elles méprisèrent les idoles et le juge, et l'ayant quitté, elles se rendirent ensemble à la maison de sainte Celsine.

Elle fit venir le diacre Ammonne, et toutes furent raffermies davantage dans la foi chrétienne, et encouragées à subir les supplices pour Celui qui a subi les tourments pour nous. S'encourageant mutuellement, elles allèrent ensemble trouver le juge et confessèrent le Christ.

Le juge ordonna de pendre le diacre Ammonne et de lui déchirer le corps,

On conduisit ensuite les vierges saintes et le diacre Ammonne à la ville d'Héraclée en Thrace. Ils se rendirent à l'endroit où l'évêque Dometianus avait déposé les restes de la sainte martyre Glycérie et y prièrent toute la nuit. Sainte Glycérie leur apparut dans une vision et leur dit : Soyez les bienvenues, vous qui aimez Dieu, servantes du Christ et mes douces compagnes, car je vous attendais depuis longtemps, afin que nous jouissions ensemble du royaume de Dieu, que nous soyons classées avec les anges et couronnées avec le Christ.

On enferma les saints au milieu des fauves; elles élevèrent, avec saint Ammonne, les mains au ciel, se mirent en prières, et les fauves ne s'approchèrent point des saints.

Conduites en présence du juge, elles prophétisèrent la mort de l'empereur Licinius, la conversion au culte de Dieu de l'empereur Constantin, la construction des églises du Christ et la ruine de l'idolâtrie. Le juge irrité ordonna de jeter au feu quelques-unes d'entre elles, et de faire mourir les autres par de cruels supplices. On emmena les saintes vierges; dix furent jetées dans les flammes, qui tressaillant au milieu d'elles comme dans une chambre nuptiale glorifiaient Dieu; elles y rendirent leur âme en priant.

En ce jour mourut par le martyre, en Perse, saint Abdius, évêque de la ville Nergoul, aux jours de Izdekert, c'est-à-dire Hazkert, roi des Perses, et de l'empereur des Grecs Théodore le Jeune.

Le grand prêtre du feu le fit saisir et l'obligea à l'adoration du soleil et du feu, et voyant qu'il ne pouvait le persuader, il ordonna de le soumettre à des tourments du matin jusqu'à midi, et de le mettre en prison ensuite, où il rendit l'âme à Dieu en bonne foi.

De même subirent le martyre les saints martyrs Ambroise et Protoctus, dont parle Eusebius, et qui, tous les deux, furent soumis à de grandes tortures et supplices par les persécuteurs, dans la ville de Césarée, où ils furent martyrisés.

En ce jour, commémoration de l'empereur Théodose le Jeune.

Ses grandes vertus sont racontées avec éloge par les historiens de l'église; elles sont au-dessus de toute description. C'est de son temps qu'a eu lieu le concile d'Éphèse de deux cents évêques, bannissant l'impie blasphème de Nestorius, qui professait Jésus-Christ, simple homme, et purifia avec beaucoup de zèle la foi orthodoxe de l'église.

Martyre de la vierge sainte Hermioné.

L'apôtre saint Philippe avait quatre filles, vierges et prophétesses. Deux d'entre elles, Hermioné et Eutychis, s'unirent et partirent pour Éphèse, pour voir et se prosterner devant saint * Jean l'apôtre et l'évangéliste théologien. * A fol. 26 v° b. Elles ne le trouvèrent pas, car il avait trépassé de la vie terrestre au ciel. Elles se firent les disciples du prêtre Pierre, qui avait reçu les grâces apostoliques et que l'apôtre Paul avait institué en cette ville. Sainte Hermioné possédait des connaissances de médecine.

Trajan, l'empereur impie, quitta Rome, voulant passer en Perse pour y faire la guerre; il vint en Asie, où il entendit la renommée de Hermioné, qui y était aussi grande que celle de Paul et Pierre à Rome. Il envoya seize soldats, qui conduisirent la sainte en sa présence. Avec beaucoup de douces paroles, il pria la sainte de renier le Christ, mais ne parvint pas à la persua-der. Il ordonna alors de souffleter la bienheureuse sur les joues. Hermioné aperçut le Seigneur sous la forme du bienheureux prêtre Pierre, en fut fortifiée et sans crainte se présenta aux tortures. Elle prophétisa à l'empereur Trajan la victoire de sa campagne contre les Perses et son retour en paix et avec joie.

A la mort de Trajan, Adrien lui succéda sur le trône. Il se fit présenter la vierge sainte Hermioné, * ne réussit pas à la détourner de l'espérance du Christ, et à lui faire croire aux idoles. Il ordonna de frapper le visage de la bienheureuse avec des baguettes, et de torturer sa personne à l'épée. Elle bénissait Dieu dans ses tourments.

On jeta ensuite la vierge sainte dans une poêle d'huile et de graisse surchauffée; la poêle fut changée également en rosée.

Le tyran, voyant qu'il ne parvenait pas à vaincre la vierge, se mit encore une fois à la supplier par de douces paroles à se rendre au temple des idoles et y immoler. La bienheureuse Hermioné, trompant l'empereur, se rendit au temple des idoles, étendit ses bras au ciel, pria Dieu, et il se fit un tremblement de terre, toutes les idoles tombèrent en ruines.

Il ordonna de tuer la vierge sainte par le glaive. Le bourreau Théodoulos s'arma d'une épée pour lui trancher la tête, ses deux mains se dessé-

Un autre bourreau, du nom * de Théodimos, saisissant l'épée pour trancher la tête de la bienheureuse, ses deux mains se desséchèrent. Il crut également à Dieu. La sainte pria pour lui, et il rendit aussi son âme à Dieu en bonne confession. * A fol. 27 r° b.

Quant à la sainte brebis du Christ, l'ayant conduite hors de la ville pour lui trancher la tête, la vierge sainte se mit à prier et avant que le bourreau l'eût frappée, elle rendit son âme à Dieu.

La vierge sainte Hermioné mourut le 6 Septembre.

du nom d'Archippas, qui desservait pieusement et avec dévotion l'église du saint archange Michel, construite sur un rocher escarpé. Beaucoup de miracles s'opéraient par la source qui jaillissait au-dessous de l'église, sur les malades et les infirmes; et nombre d'Hellènes [païens] y venaient et croyaient au Christ, et Archippas les baptisait.

Les idolâtres dans leur grande erreur furent pris de jalousie, et pleins de colère, creusèrent la terre faisant face à l'église, et réunirent les deux grands fleuves qui coulaient à une lieue de Chonæ, et en dirigèrent le cours sur l'église pour la détruire et faire mourir le chaste serviteur de l'église de l'archange, et faire disparaître la source de guérison.

Lorsque Archippas sentit l'impétueux cours des fleuves, il n'eut aucune crainte, espérant en Dieu et en la puissance invincible de l'archange; il éleva ses mains au ciel et pria Dieu. Il lui apparut, en rêve, l'archange de Dieu, comme une colonne de feu qui atteignait le ciel, et qui lui disait : Je suis Michel l'archange, chef des armées de Dieu; prends courage et vois la puissance de Dieu. Il frappa de sa lance le rocher escarpé et l'entr'ouvrit. Au même instant la terre trembla, il se fit comme un grondement violent, qui réveilla Archippas saisi de grande peur et de tremblement; il regarda et vit le rocher entr'ouvert et devenu un abîme profond, où les eaux du fleuve allèrent s'engloutir, comme dans un creuset, pour sortir de l'autre côté, et l'église L'apôtre saint Philippe avait quatre filles, vierges et prophétesses, comme le raconte Luc en disant : Nous arrivâmes à Césarée, à la maison de l'évangéliste Philippe, l'un des sept et qui avait quatre filles vierges et prophétesses[1].

Deux d'entre elles, Hermioné et Eutychis, s'unirent et se rendirent à Éphèse pour voir et saluer saint Jean l'apôtre théologien et évangéliste, mais ne le trouvèrent point, car il avait trépassé de la terre au ciel. Elles se firent disciples du prêtre Pierre que l'apôtre Paul y avait institué, et elles prêchaient l'Évangile avec lui et convertissaient nombre de personnes au Christ.

Quant à sainte Hermioné, qui avait des connaissances de médecine, elle soignait beaucoup de malades gratuitement, et ceux qu'elle ne pouvait guérir par l'art humain, elle les guérissait par la parole et la grâce du Christ, les aveugles, les boiteux, les possédés et les estropiés, et au lieu de rétribution, elle les convertissait à la foi du Christ, accordant aux personnes guéries le salut de leur âme et de leur corps.

pour y faire la guerre. Arrivé en Asie, il entendit le nom de Hermioné, qui y était très puissante, à l'égal de Pierre et Paul à Rome. Il expédia seize soldats pour l'amener devant l'empereur. Ceux qui l'affectionnaient l'en avisèrent pour qu'elle pût s'échapper.

Les soldats, après de nombreuses courses, ne l'ayant pas trouvée, en revinrent avec désespoir. En passant par un village, ils la trouvèrent avec le prêtre Pierre, occupés à prêcher la parole de Dieu, mais ils ne la reconnurent point, parce que la renommée de sa puissance était grande, et qu'elle était vêtue très pauvrement. Ayant interrogé à son sujet, elle ne se fit point connaître tout d'abord, mais elle les conduisit chez elle, leur offrit à manger, et leur dit ensuite : Celle que vous cherchez, c'est moi. Saisis de respect devant son amabilité, ils ne voulurent pas l'emmener, mais elle les accompagna de bon gré. La sainte fut mise en présence de l'empereur, qui la pria avec beaucoup d'affabilité de renier le Christ, mais ne put la persuader. Il lui promettait beaucoup de présents et des honneurs, mais elle s'écriait hautement : Je suis chrétienne et je méprise toutes les gloires de la terre; je désire mourir pour mon espoir, le Christ.

Alors, l'empereur irrité ordonna de la tourmenter et de la soumettre aux plus cruels supplices. Elle bénissait Dieu, avec patience. Il ordonna de souffleter la bienheureuse sur les joues; elle aperçut, par les yeux de l'âme, devant elle le Christ, en fut encouragée et sans crainte s'offrit aux tortures. Elle prédit à l'empereur Trajan sa délivrance des tortures et la victoire de l'empereur dans la guerre contre les Perses et son retour en paix et joie.

Trajan voyant la fermeté de son esprit et les grâces miraculeuses, divines, la délivra des tortures et fit cesser, pour elle, la persécution des chrétiens. Il la pria de l'accompagner en Perse et d'être pour lui comme une mère. Elle n'y consentit point en disant : Si tu acceptes la foi du Christ, je t'accompagnerai en esprit; je prierai maintenant Dieu et tu auras la victoire sur tes ennemis, mais tu ne répondras point par le mal à la grâce de Dieu, et épargneras les chrétiens. L'empereur lui offrit bien des richesses, qu'elle n'accepta point, et qu'elle lui conseilla de donner aux pauvres. Alors l'empereur s'étant mis en route vainquit les Perses, selon la prédiction d'Hermioné, et à son retour il montra beaucoup de bienveillance aux fidèles, comme lui avait dit la sainte.

Après la mort de Trajan, régna son gendre Adrien. Étant venu à Éphèse et ayant entendu parler de la sainte, il envoya des personnes pour la rechercher, mais qui ne la trouvèrent point. Plus tard ils l'aperçurent entrer dans un village pour y prêcher la parole de Dieu, mais ne la reconnurent point. Et elle, comme la première fois, les conduisit chez elle, les hospitalisa, et se rendit ensuite avec eux auprès de l'empereur.

parvint point à la lui faire renoncer à l'espérance du Christ et à lui faire croire aux idoles. Il ordonna de la souffleter sur les joues, et de lui briser la bouche, de frapper le visage de la bienheureuse avec des baguettes et de lui torturer le corps avec l'épée. La sainte bénissait Dieu parmi ses souffrances. Ensuite il lui fit mettre à nu les pieds et on lui frappa sur les plantes jusqu'à en faire sortir des ruisseaux de sang. Après on lui fit souffrir le supplice en la jetant dans un chaudron de cuivre plein d'huile bouillante, de plomb et de poix, ensuite dans une poêle contenant de la graisse et de l'huile bouillante, et par les soins du Christ elle fut sauvée de la mort.

Alors l'impie se mit à exhorter, par de douces paroles, la sainte, pour qu'elle se rendît au temple des idoles et y sacrifiât. Hermioné, pour tromper l'empereur en lui faisant croire qu'elle allait sacrifier, se rendit au temple des idoles, étendit les mains, pria Dieu, et aussitôt il se fit un tremblement de terre, qui fit tomber toutes les idoles et les brisa.

L'empereur ordonna de trancher la tête à la vierge sainte. On l'emmena hors de la ville pour la décapiter, et pendant qu'elle priait, avant que le bourreau l'eût frappée, elle rendit son âme à Dieu, le 27 Navasard, 6 Septembre. Elle est notre intercesseur auprès du Christ. Des personnes pieuses, habitant la ville d'Éphèse, enlevèrent son corps et l'ayant transporté dans la ville, l'enterrèrent dans un lieu célèbre.

Martyre de saint Sozon.

* A fol. 27 v° a.

Le saint martyr du Christ Sozon était chrétien, aux jours de l'empereur * Maximien, l'impie. Il était du pays de Lycaonie, du village de Mintaraxio; il gardait des brebis, et s'étant rendu en un lieu où il y avait des chênes et une source, il posa sa tête auprès d'un arbre et s'endormit.

Et le Seigneur lui apparut en vision, lui ordonna de laisser à l'endroit où il avait dormi son arc et trois flèches de son carquois, en sa mémoire, car par la grâce de Dieu on devait construire en cet emplacement.

Il se leva et fit comme il lui avait été commandé par Dieu. Il pria et demanda à Dieu, pour tous les affligés qui auront recours à cet endroit, de trouver pitié et guérison. Il se mit à parcourir ces contrées et y prêcher le Christ, il enseignait à beaucoup de gens et les baptisait.

Il s'introduisit secrètement dans un temple et y déroba une main d'idole en or, la mit en menues pièces et la distribua aux pauvres. Le prêtre s'étant emparé d'un autre le soumit aux tortures pour cause du vol. Ce qu'ayant appris, le bienheureux Sozon se rendit auprès du juge, fit relâcher le prisonnier et confessa le nom du Christ devant le juge tout en avouant le vol.

On jeta son corps au feu; aussitôt la pluie et la grêle tombèrent du ciel et éteignirent le feu. Les chrétiens accoururent, s'emparèrent de son corps et l'inhumèrent. Le saint martyr du Christ Sozon mourut le 7 Septembre.

En ce jour, fête du saint martyr Eupsychius.

Il était de la ville de Césarée. On le dénonça auprès du gouverneur de la province, Sapricius, comme étant chrétien. Ce qu'apprenant, Eupsychius récompensa les traîtres avec de l'argent et leur dit : Je vous remercie de m'avoir préparé le royaume des cieux. On pendit le saint à un arbre, on lui déchira le corps et ensuite, on lui trancha la tête pour le nom du Christ.

En ce jour, fête du saint martyr Eupsychius de Césarée.

Saint Eupsychius était de la ville de Césarée; il y était né et élevé, et avait le grade de sénateur. Lorsque Adrien devint empereur des Romains, il se fit baptiser après la mort de son père et distribua tous ses biens aux pauvres. On le dénonça auprès du gouverneur. Le saint récompensa le dénonciateur et lui dit : Je te remercie de m'avoir préparé le royaume des cieux.

On pendit le saint à un arbre et on lui déchira le corps et les côtes d'une façon cruelle, et on le jeta en prison. Ensuite on lui trancha la tête pour le nom du Christ, et son sang coula comme du lait. On enterra ses restes, sur lesquels on construisit une grande église qui s'appelle, de son nom, Eupsychius, qui se traduit vaillant d'esprit. C'est là que fut enterré le grand Basile.

sommes le peuple et le prix du sang de son fils unique, car nous avons été instruits par lui-même et par la volonté de Dieu, qu'il convient de nous y préparer et de célébrer l'avant-fête de la naissance de notre sainte Reine.

Car Dieu a jugé convenable de l'annoncer auparavant à notre nature. Il l'a fait non seulement par la prédiction des prophètes dans les anciens temps, dont l'un du saint groupe est Isaïe, qui prédit d'abord la naissance de celle qui naquit aujourd'hui elle-même de ses parents qui étaient de la racine de David et de Jessé en disant : Il sortira un tige [un bâton] de la racine de Jessé [1]. C'est comme si la faiblesse sénile, appuyée sur le bâton, se fût redressée, et il ajoute ensuite la naissance du Seigneur d'elle : Une fleur s'élèvera de sa racine [2].

Et maintenant Dieu, par l'intermédiaire de l'ange, prédit sa sainte naissance, car les anges allant au-devant d'Anne et de Joachim avec allégresse leur offraient la bonne nouvelle de la naissance de la très Sainte. Car ces très saints esprits célestes ont l'habitude de prendre part aux joies de notre salut. Si d'après les paroles du Christ, ces mêmes esprits célestes se réjouissent tous pour le salut d'un seul pécheur [3], combien pouvons-nous imaginer leur joie, en fêtant aujourd'hui le commencement du salut de toute notre nature, c'est-à-dire la naissance de la bienheureuse par laquelle les péchés et les malédictions furent enlevés.

En ce même jour, fête de saint Étienne patriarche de Rome.

Aux jours de l'empereur romain Valérien et de son fils Gallienus qui suscitèrent une persécution contre les chrétiens, saint Étienne était l'évêque de Rome, le vingtième après Pierre. Il convertissait nombre de personnes au Christ, en faisait des catéchumènes et les baptisait. Ayant convoqué tous les fidèles, il les encouragea à rester fermes et sans crainte dans la foi du Christ.

Le prêtre Bonus affirma, de la part de tous, vouloir accepter toutes sortes de tortures et ne point renier le Christ. Mais tous les clercs jugèrent à propos de baptiser les catéchumènes, et de conduire à la perfection ceux qui avaient appris la doctrine de la foi. Ce que le saint patriarche fit. En un jour il ordonna ceux qui y avaient été préparés, trois prêtres et sept diacres, et il conféra les autres ordres à six hommes vierges. Nombre de païens vinrent pour se faire baptiser par le saint, entre autres le noble Némésios avec sa fille aveugle. Ils étaient venus demander la guérison, et lorsque Étienne les eut baptisés, l'aveugle recouvra la vue et fut témoin d'un grand miracle. Le saint ordonna diacre le noble Némésios qui était démarque.

Ce qu'ayant appris, les païens en firent part à l'empereur, qui ordonna de

Saint Tertullianus mourut avec eux. On lui brisa la bouche à coups de pierre, ensuite on l'étendit sur une planche, on lui enleva les nerfs, et on le fit mourir par l'épée. C'était lui qui avait enterré les saints martyrs susmentionnés, et comme il était l'économe de la maison d'Olympius, il en avait distribué tous les biens aux pauvres; ainsi que saint Sérapion était l'économe de la maison de Némésius, et avait également distribué tous les biens de son maître aux pauvres, et il mourut par les flammes. Saint Étienne le patriarche inhuma avec honneur tous ces saints, qu'il avait baptisés et avait conduits par ses exhortations au courage héroïque du martyre.

Quelques jours après on saisit aussi le bienheureux Étienne et on le présenta au tribunal accompagné de beaucoup d'ecclésiastiques. Après un long interogatoire, lorsque le saint n'eut point accepté de sacrifier aux idoles, on l'introduisit, malgré lui, dans un temple d'idoles, dans l'espoir qu'il se laissera persuader. coups de feu accompagnés d'un tremblement de terre, une grande partie du temple s'affaissa avec les idoles. Les soldats quittèrent le saint et se précipitèrent en fuite.

Le saint, se trouvant en liberté, se rendit au temple de saint Lucius le martyr. Il y réunit tous les fidèles, les enseigna et encouragea avec des paroles de consolation à rester fermes dans le Christ. Après avoir commencé par cela, il y accomplit le mystère du saint sacrifice entouré du ministère des archiprêtres, des prêtres et diacres qui étaient avec lui. Car il ne consolait pas seulement les fidèles par la doctrine, mais encore par l'accomplissement du saint mystère il les confirmait toujours dans la foi du Christ.

Et pendant que le saint offrait le divin sacrifice, les soldats entourèrent l'église avec beaucoup de préparatifs et de gens armés et par leurs cris faisaient trembler les lieux et le saint temple de Dieu. Quant au saint, ayant accompli, en toute quiétude d'esprit, le saint sacrifice, il donna la sainte communion à tous les présents, et communia lui-même; les portes étaient fermées. Le saint mystère n'était pas encore complètement achevé, que les soldats, forçant les portes de l'église, firent irruption à l'intérieur et de là dans la sainte abside de l'autel, où ils tranchèrent la tête au saint patriarche, qui tomba sur l'autel en mêlant son sang au sang du Christ, comme un signe qui devait prouver qu'il régnerait éternellement avec lui. Les fidèles enlevèrent le corps et l'enterrèrent avec de grands honneurs.

29 NAVASARD, 8 Septembre.

Nativité de la sainte mère de Dieu, bénie de tous, toujours vierge, Marie, de Joachim et Anne.

Du nombre et de la famille des douze tribus d'Israël, se trouvait Joachim,
* A fol. 28 r° a. homme pieux et craignant Dieu, * et fort riche. Il offrait le double des offrandes à Dieu. Le grand jour du Seigneur s'approcha. Les fils d'Israël offrirent leurs offrandes au Seigneur, et avec eux Joachim. Le grand prêtre Rouphim lui dit : Tu ne dois pas offrir tes offrandes au Seigneur avant les autres, car tu n'as point d'enfant parmi Israël.

Եւ Յովակիմ տրտմեցաւ յոյժ եւ դարձաւ տրտմեալ ի տաճարէն Տեառն եւ ոչ երեւեցոյց Աննայի կնոջ իւրում, այլ գնաց յանապատ եւ անդ կանգնեաց զխորան իւր, եւ պահեաց քառասուն օր եւ ասէր ցանձն իւր. Joachim s'en affligea beaucoup, revint triste du temple du Seigneur, mais ne le fit pas voir à sa femme Anne. Il se rendit dans le désert, y déploya sa tente et jeûna quarante jours. Il se disait : Je ne retournerai plus chez moi, je ne mangerai ni boirai, jusqu'à ce que mon Seigneur et Dieu m'ait visité. Mes prières me serviront de nourriture et mes larmes de boisson.

Quant à sa femme, Anne, elle gémissait d'une douleur double, et elle pleurait une double peine, et se disait à elle-même : Je pleurerai mon veuvage et je pleurerai aussi ma stérilité. Et Anne revêtit ses vêtements de deuil et descendit, à la neuvième heure de la journée, dans son jardin, elle s'assit au pied d'un arbre de lauriers. Elle se mit à prier Dieu et dit : Dieu de mes pères, souviens-toi de mes peines et bénis-moi, comme tu as béni les entrailles de Sara, en lui donnant un fils, Isaac. Elle fixa * le ciel en pleurant. Elle aperçut * A fol. 28 r° b. dans le laurier deux nids de passereaux, et elle soupira longuement et dit : Malheur à moi! Qui m'a donné le jour, et quelle mère m'a mise au monde? Et il dit à ses bergers : Apportez-moi dix brebis, blanches, sans taches, et qu'elles soient données au nom de mon Dieu. Et il dit : Apportez-moi douze jeunes veaux, tendres et beaux, et qu'ils soient donnés aux prêtres et aux vieillards. Et apportez-moi cent boucs, et qu'ils soient donnés à tout le peuple.

Et Anne ayant aperçu Joachim qui revenait, courut au-devant de lui et dit : J'ai su maintenant que le Seigneur Dieu a eu pitié de moi et qu'il m'a beaucoup bénie, et que je ne serai plus veuve et sans enfant.

La femme le prit avec elle, se rendit en Afrique et se présentant au gendre du roi, commença par le supplier, dans l'espoir qu'il lui rendrait son fils. Lorsqu'il ne l'eut pas écoutée, la femme lui dit alors : Accepte cet homme à la place de mon fils, et rends-moi mon fils unique. Le gendre du roi accepta avec joie, le croyant un homme de métier, et dit à Paulin : Quel métier connais-tu? Il lui dit : Aucun, je sais seulement soigner le jardin. L'autre acceptant Paulin, rendit le fils à la veuve, et confia au premier son jardin pour en prendre soin. Նոյն ինքն ամենասուրբ աստուածածինն է, որ պտղաբերեաց կենաց պտուղ զՔրիստոս. որոյ մարմինն կեանք է եւ պատճառ կենաց որպէս ասաց. Այս է հացն կենաց իջեալ յերկնից, զի որ ոք ուտիցէ ի սմանէ կեցցէ ի յաւիտեան. եւ որ ուտէ զմարմին իմ՝ կեցցէ վասն իմ, որպէս եւ ես կենդանի եմ վասն Հօր, եւ թէ. մի մեռցի յաւիտեան:

Զի ծառ եւ պտուղ էր որ մեզ պատճառ մեղաց եւ մահու եղեւ, ի ծառ եւ ի պտուղ օրինակի պատճառն լուծման նզովիցն այնորիկ՝ սուրբ ծնողն եւ անխախտաբար որպէս պտուղ ծնեալն ի նմանէ, որոյ կերակրովն կենդանացաք եւ արդարացաք:

Որ եւ առ Աբրահամ օրինակեցաւ ի ծառն, որ անսերմն ծնաւ զանճմանն իւր պտուղ զգառն. որ կենաց պատճառ պտուղ էր Իսահակայ: Որպէս եւ սա առանց առն ծնաւ զանճմանն իւր զԱստուած մարդացեալ, որ փոխանակ * աշխարհի տուաւ յԱստուծոյ ի մահ, եւ կեցոյց զմեզ: * B p. 124 a.

Նոյնպէս եւ առ Ահարոնիւ երեւեցաւ ծառ՝ առանց արմատոյ եւ խոնաւութեան ծաղկեալ եւ պտղաբերեալ զարքայականն ընկոյզ, գոլով գաւազան քահանայական: Նոյն է եւ մորենին անկէզ: Զոր եւ Դաւիթ յառաջ երանելով զառ ի բոլոր ազգաց լեզուս զյետոյ երանեալն զնոյն կոյս՝ զմիայն մարդն անարատ եւ աստուածապատկեր, որ ոչ ի խորհուրդս կամ ի գործ կամ ի ժանդ աթոռ մեղացն գնաց երբեք, կամ եկաց կամ նստաւ:

très sainte mère de Dieu est l'arbre de la vie qui fructifia le fruit de la vie, le Christ, dont le corps est la vie et la cause de la vie, ainsi qu'il le dit : Ceci est le pain de vie descendu du ciel, et celui qui en mangera vivra éternellement; et celui qui mangera ma chair, vivra à cause de moi, comme moi je vis à cause de mon Père et il ne mourra jamais[1].

Car c'est l'arbre et le fruit qui fut pour nous la cause du péché et de la mort; et à la place de cet arbre la sainte Mère est la cause du relèvement de ces mêmes malédictions. Celui qui naquit d'Elle sans corruption et dont le corps nous sert de nourriture; Celui par lequel nous sommes vivifiés et justifiés, tient la place du fruit.

Abraham vit la même figure sous la forme de l'arbre, duquel naquit sans semence le fruit incomparable, l'agneau, qui fut pour Isaac la cause de la vie et son fruit. De même, Marie donna sans semence virile naissance à son incomparable Dieu fait homme, * qui fut livré, en honneur de Dieu, à la mort à la place du monde coupable. * B p. 124 a.

De même, du temps d'Aaron, apparut un arbre sans racine et sans sève, fleurissant et fructifiant la noix royale : ce fut le bâton sacerdotal. De même le buisson qui ne brûlait point. David, bien avant dans les temps, fit l'éloge de la bienheureuse vierge que plus tard toutes les langues des peuples couvrirent de louanges, là où il parle du seul homme sans tache représentant l'image de Dieu, qui ne suivit jamais les mauvais conseils, ne s'arrêta à des actions, et ne s'assied jamais sur le siège de la pestilence du péché[2].

David l'appelle comme un Arbre qui donne son fruit en son temps, en s'opposant au fruit ancien qui fut goûté contre les lois du temps et qui ne perdit point ses feuilles [1]. C'est-à-dire, ainsi que l'arbre qui a donné son fruit en automne, se dépouille ensuite de ses feuilles; de la même manière la femme, en mettant au monde son enfant, sa virginité se flétrit et disparaît. Mais la mère du Seigneur conserva, après avoir mis au monde le Christ, son immaculée virginité éternellement intacte sans flétrissure; car la porte resta fermée à l'entrée comme à la sortie du Dieu d'Israël [2].

Or, si l'arbre de la vie, d'après tout ce qui vient d'être énoncé, est la cause de la vie de tous les êtres, c'est-à-dire la bienheureuse Mère de Dieu; et si cet arbre, d'après David, est planté au courant de l'eau [3], et d'après Salomon, l'arbre pousse du fruit de la justice [4], cela signifie sa sainte naissance, qui eut lieu aujourd'hui, arbre planté dans la terre, d'un abord facile parmi les hommes et qui n'est point gardé par les séraphins à l'épée de flammes.

Et cet arbre poussa de Joachim et d'Anne, des justes, comme fruits de leur justice, de ceux, qui furent arrosés par le courant des eaux de la loi et qui la mirent au monde aujourd'hui par le courant des grâces du Saint-Esprit, annoncée sous la forme des nuages et des cours d'eau par les prophètes; elle, la sainte plante, fruit de tous les justes patriarches et prophètes et don qui équivaut à la terre entière.

Car dire que l'arbre de vie * germe du fruit de la justice, c'est révéler ce mystère [d'aujourd'hui]. Ainsi que tout fruit ensemencé produit l'arbre à sa ressemblance; de même tous les actes de vertu et tout le fruit de la foi à commencer par Abel, Énoch, Noé, Abraham, Job, Moïse, David et tous les patriarches et tous les anciens pères et tous les prophètes, tout cela a produit cet arbre de vie, fruit de leur génération et de leur souche. * B p. 124 b.

C'est bien à Abraham, à cause de la justice provenant de sa foi, que Dieu promit : Dans ta race seront bénis tous les peuples de la terre[1]. Et si ceux qui naquirent de la première femme héritèrent de sa malédiction, maintenant ils furent bénis par celle qui fut mystiquement la première mère [en Ève], que le Saint-Esprit annonça la seule bénie entre toutes les femmes[2].

Il fut de même promis et juré à David, comme une juste récompense de sa douceur et des perfections de son cœur, qu'il aurait un fils qui jouirait éternellement du royaume. Car c'était lui la corne qui devait pousser au Christ, oint de l'huile, et la lampe qui, par Dieu, devait être préparée pour illuminer la terre.

C'est lui qui devait être béni dans la souche des justes patriarches, et la promesse d'en être le premier père fut, comme un grand héritage de bénédiction, transmise de père en fils. Et c'était aussi le droit d'aînesse, que mérita Jacob, et dont furent privés Juda et Ésaü et Ruben, c'est-à-dire la source de bénédiction, la naissance de la sainte mère du Seigneur de par a achevé l'œuvre commencé depuis longtemps, se repose et s'en réjouit et réunit en une fête tous ses amis. D'après cet exemple, après avoir construit le tabernacle du témoignage, qui était l'emblème de Marie, Dieu ordonna à Moïse et au peuple de célébrer une grande fête de dédicace pour l'achèvement et la conservation du tabernacle, tous les chefs des tribus devaient y apporter leurs offrandes. Ce n'était en soi-même et en tout qu'une figure qu'il contenait du vrai temple de Dieu [de Marie].

D'où il est évident que, comme le travailleur lorsqu'il a reçu le prix de ses sueurs, s'en réjouit et se repose grandement, de même aujourd'hui les âmes de tous les pères justes et des prophètes se réjouissent d'avoir reçu de Dieu la récompense de leur justice et des sueurs que les vertus leur ont méritée la naissance de l'enfant bénie et espérée, qui devrait mettre au monde le fils de Dieu et sauver toute la terre.

Reconnaissez donc, par là, la grandeur de la joie que Dieu éprouve aujourd'hui, d'abord d'avoir accompli son œuvre commencé dans les premiers temps, c'est-à-dire la naissance de la mère du Seigneur, Marie, que nous croyons avoir été choisie et préparée par Dieu dès les premiers temps.

Car si Jérémie fut, avant sa naissance, choisi et purifié et annoncé [1], et les apôtres furent élus, non seulement * avant leur naissance mais avant la création du monde [2], reconnaissez donc combien plus devait l'être Elle, qui fut la cause de l'élection de tous les prophètes et l'achèvement de tout le chœur des apôtres prédestinés. Elle fut avant tout et avant tous choisie; elle fut l'objet des desseins prémédités par Dieu dans les temps les plus reculés, œuvre commencé et fondé, et que tous les patriarches et les prophètes des premiers siècles prédirent par paroles et par figures. * B p. 125 b.

fidélité de Dieu avait prédit, c'est vraiment une grande fête pour Dieu et pour tous les esprits célestes. Et si l'ange annonçait à Zacharie, pour Jean, que beaucoup se réjouiront de sa naissance [1], combien plus pouvons-nous nous imaginer que la naissance de la mère du Seigneur de Jean, de la céleste reine à tous, à tout l'univers, de la reine de la terre et du ciel sera une cause de réjouissance pour tous. Réjouissons-nous donc, fidèles, en la naissance de Celle qui est la mère de tous les chrétiens, qui a enfanté Celui qui est la plénitude de l'église catholique [2], et qui est le principe de la naissance du baptême sans tache, de l'eau et du Saint-Esprit, qui représente la naissance du Fils de Dieu, de la Vierge et du Saint-Esprit.

Car, comme il était impossible à la vierge d'engendrer un enfant sans le concours de l'homme, mais qu'elle mit au monde le fils de Dieu, par le Saint-Esprit, de même l'eau ne pouvait faire naître les hommes fils de Dieu; et par le même Saint-Esprit par lequel la Vierge fut fortifiée, les entrailles des fonts baptismaux, qui sont une image de la sainte Vierge elle-même, furent fortifiées et nous sommes nés fils de Dieu.

Il est donc évident que la Vierge fut le commencement et l'ouverture des fonts baptismaux de la naissance spirituelle, de par le Saint-Esprit, mettant au monde Celui qui est notre confrère de par le corps et Dieu de par sa

Or si le Christ lui-même fut appelé notre frère, son père, Dieu, fut appelé notre père, et de même sa mère, Marie, fut appelée notre mère qui nous mit au monde. Et, par conséquent, comme mère affectueuse envers ses enfants, elle s'est attachée par amour et par liens affectueux à tous les fidèles, dont elle a pris soin maternellement, et ayant vis-à-vis de Dieu, comme de son Fils, la liberté maternelle, elle s'adresse à Lui et implore pour nous de bonne grâce. Elle s'adresse à Celui qu'elle souffrit neuf mois dans ses entrailles; qu'elle mit au monde comme une mère; qu'elle prit dans ses bras comme un enfant; à cause duquel elle s'attrista, devant les troubles d'esprit de Joseph; à cause duquel elle eut un chagrin, devant la foule des Juifs soupçonneux, murmurant sans raison; qu'elle allaita de son sein; qu'elle enveloppa dans les langes; qu'elle serra contre elle avec vigilance; qu'elle embrassa librement; qu'elle prit, pour se rendre en fuite en Égypte; dont elle était heureuse en le voyant croître; à qui Lui, comme un fils envers sa mère, fut soumis avec obéissance; que Lui, d'après les lois qu'il avait mises, honora comme vraie mère; qui, sur la croix, au moment de rendre l'âme, oubliant toutes les peines du supplice, à la vue des souffrances pénibles de son cœur maternel, en fut touché avec grande tendresse et en prenant soin, supérieur à la mort, la confia à son disciple. Et elle ensuite intercéda incessamment pour tous les fidèles, comme pour ses fils cadets, et nous témoigne de la bienveillance comme aux frères d'Adam; et Il exauce, avec un empressement égal, comme à une mère, tout ce que les Romains eussent la coutume générale de célébrer ce jour, quelques-uns parmi les saints remarquèrent que les chœurs des anges célestes, en cette nuit, célébraient avec grande allégresse la fête de la nativité de la sainte Vierge en l'honorant hautement au ciel tous les ans. Et cette vision, ils l'eurent non seulement une fois, mais deux fois en cette même nuit.

Et ensuite, comme nous avons eu la mère du Seigneur, * qui l'a mis au monde en toute virginité, comme intercesseur auprès du Verbe unique, en même temps que l'acte d'être né d'Elle; aussi nous prenons aujourd'hui, vis-à-vis de la vraie mère du Verbe de Dieu, comme intercesseurs, ses bienheureux parents et l'acte d'être née d'eux. Je dis les bienheureux Joachim et Anne, qui nous offrirent cette fleur qui nous produisit comme fruit le Christ, et que les prophètes appelèrent pour cela le champ, et la vallée productrice de ce lis immortel, que nous avons reconnue aujourd'hui comme un champ par l'humilité de l'esprit et comme un lis par la splendeur de la pureté des sentiments, selon Salomon, qui appelle, avec tous les éloges, la mère du Seigneur : lis de la vallée et fleur des champs [1].

Et nous croyons que sa naissance et sa descendance d'eux qui a été la cause de notre salut, est fêtée aujourd'hui non seulement par le groupe des patriarches, le concert des prophètes, le chœur des apôtres et les légions de tous les saints, en la Jérusalem céleste, mais que les chœurs des anges et des milices flamboyants s'associent aussi pour la célébrer au ciel, se réjouissant du salut qui naît pour les hommes.

Et avec les temps, la terre l'ayant adoptée des esprits célestes et la coutume ayant continué, l'Église commença à célébrer cette fête pour toujours. Et les bienheureux, Jérôme et autres, racontent * les circonstances de la * B lignes de nos traditions primitives.

Or, la très sainte vierge était la fille de Joachim et Anne. Ce Joachim était de la maison de David, étant le trente-huitième des descendants de Nathan, fils de David. Car Lévi, qui fut un des petits-fils de Nathan, engendra Melki et Panthère. Melki eut pour fils Héli, dont le fils fut appelé Jacob, et qui était de la race de Salomon, d'où naquit Joseph. Quant à Panthère, selon nos historiographes, il engendra Joachim; mais selon les Latins Panthère eut pour fils Barpanthère et ce dernier engendra Joachim.

Anne était de la tribu de Lévi, fille du prêtre Mathan; ce prêtre Mathan avait sa résidence à Bethléem; il eut trois filles : Marie, Solié, et Anne. Il maria Marie à Bethléem, elle eut une fille Solomé, qui fut la sage-femme à l'occasion de la naissance du Christ. Il maria également Solié à Bethléem, qui mit au monde Élisabeth, la mère de Jean. Quant à Anne, il la donna à Joachim à Nazareth, qui était de la maison de David et de Juda. Bien qu'il fût défendu de par les lois de mêler deux tribus ensemble, afin que les partages séparés des tribus ne fussent mêlés ensemble, cependant, comme les Lévites n'avaient point d'héritage et de partage de terres, ils se mêlaient couramment avec la tribu royale du Juda; ainsi Aaron avait épousé la sœur de Naasson, prince de Juda[1], et le grand prêtre Ioïada, la sœur du roi Joram[2]. De même Joachim, qui était de la tribu de Juda, avait épousé Anne de la tribu de Lévi. C'est pour cela que Gabriel nomma Élisabeth parente de Marie[3].

Par conséquent, la très sainte mère de Dieu doit sa naissance au mélange
* B p. 127 b. de deux tribus, de celle de Juda et de David, qui était la maison royale, * et de celle de Lévi et d'Aaron, qui était la race des grands prêtres. Car Celui qui devait naître d'elle, le Christ, devait être vrai roi et grand prêtre éternellement, d'après la parole de Dieu : Tu es prêtre pour toujours selon l'ordre de Melkisédech[4], et : Il lui donnera la gloire du royaume de la maison de David[5]. C'est pour cela qu'il devait faire passer à la postérité l'héritage des ancêtres corporels, car ces oints étaient prêtres et rois, et beaucoup d'entre eux furent des prophètes. et accomplissant la figure, il fut appelé oint, comme réunissant en sa personne toute la grâce des oints.

Par conséquent, en la personne du Christ, étant et provenant, de la race sacerdotale et royale, grand prêtre pour toujours et roi immortel, l'alliance, le serment de Dieu s'est accompli, comme l'annonçait le prophète Ézéchiel : Je détruirai mon alliance avec le jour et la nuit, le soleil ne devant plus éclairer le jour, et la lune, la nuit; de même sera rompue mon alliance avec David mon serviteur, pour qu'il n'ait plus de fils qui règne pour toujours sur son trône, et avec les prêtres de Lévi, de manière qu'ils ne doivent plus offrir de l'encens tous les jours[1].

Et c'est évident, qu'à part le Christ, il n'y a personne maintenant qui soit roi parmi les fils de David, siégeant sur son trône, ni un grand prêtre parmi les lévites, qui fasse les fonctions de prêtrise; et le serment de Dieu reste infaillible, et son alliance demeure inébranlable, comme le soleil et la lune qui existent. Il est donc hors de doute que ces choses se sont accomplies en la personne du Christ, qui réunissait, descendant des deux tribus, en une unité le vrai prêtre et le vrai roi.

Donc ce Joachim, le père de Marie, que nous avons démontré être fils de David et de la tribu royale de Juda, demeurait à Nazareth, ville de laquelle le Christ, selon les prophètes, devait tirer son nom[2]. Quant à Anne, * elle * B p. 128 a.

était fille des prêtres de la race d'Aaron, car elle descendait de la tribu des Lévites, et était de Bethléem, ville en laquelle le Christ devait naître selon les paroles des prophètes. Cette Anne, d'après nos historiens, fut unie seulement à Joachim, et mit au monde la très sainte Vierge, mère de Dieu, et ne s'unit plus à d'autre homme.

Or, Joachim et Anne étaient justes et purs de toutes taches de péché; ils passaient leur vie pieusement; par conséquent ils avaient une conduite, devant Dieu et les hommes, innocente et intangible à la calomnie, une conduite pleine de piété. Pleins de zèle pour la prière, le jeûne et l'abstinence, dévoués à la loi, une famille dévouée au temple, pleine de charité, infatigable au travail et par conséquent très riche en biens. Ils partageaient en trois parties le revenu annuel de leurs labeurs, dont ils offraient l'une au temple de Dieu, et aux prêtres, ministres du temple; et la seconde, ils la partageaient aux pauvres et aux indigents; et la troisième partie, ils s'en servaient pour eux, pour la famille et les hôtes.

Ils avaient ainsi réglé leur vie, en toutes choses, et vivaient ensemble pieusement, s'occupant de bonnes œuvres pendant vingt ans. Ils n'avaient point d'enfant, car les entrailles d'Anne étaient fermées par la stérilité. Car il convenait à la mère et à celle qui fut le commencement de tous les miracles, de naître miraculeusement d'entrailles stériles, comme elle-même devait d'une manière particulièrement miraculeuse en toute virginité mettre au monde le Verbe de Dieu, et s'élever du degré inférieur de stérilité au degré supérieur d'un enfantement virginal.

C'est pour cette raison que la naissance de la mère de Dieu ne s'accomplit point d'après les règles ordinaires de la nature, mais qu'elle fut le fruit de longues prières, de supplications et de vœux, elle qui devait être pour tout le monde le commencement et la source de sainteté. mère du Fils unique et le receptacle du Saint-Esprit, que ses parents promirent secrètement que s'ils avaient un enfant, ils l'offriraient à Dieu.

Ils se rendaient donc toujours, tous les ans, à Jérusalem, ayant les mains pleines d'offrandes et de dons de bonnes œuvres, car Joachim offrait toujours le double d'offrandes.

Le grand jour du Seigneur dans lequel on célébrait l'anniversaire de la consécration du temple s'approchait. Les enfants d'Israël accourus présentaient leurs offrandes au Seigneur. Joachim s'y rendit avec eux, accompagné de ses parents, et apporta très volontiers et d'un cœur ardent ses offrandes à Dieu.

Mais les grands prêtres Ruphim et Abiathar s'opposèrent à lui en lui disant : Tu ne dois pas présenter tes offrandes à Dieu avant les autres, car tu n'as point d'enfant dans Israël. De même dirent les autres prêtres, en ajoutant qu'il était, d'après la loi, considéré comme une malédiction d'être stérile et sans enfant dans Israël.

Joachim fut pris d'une grande tristesse et ne voulut, à cause de la grande honte, retourner chez lui, croyant s'exposer à une grande insulte de la part de ses parents devant lesquels le grand prêtre l'avait blâmé. Il s'en alla triste du temple de Dieu et ne se montra point à Anne, sa femme; mais il se rendit chez ses bergers et de là dans le désert, où il planta sa tente et se mit à prier Dieu, pendant quarante jours, plein d'espérance d'être visité par lui.

Alors il aperçut dans une vision l'ange du Seigneur, enveloppé d'une grande lumière, qui le consola et lui dit : Joachim, Dieu a exaucé tes prières, tes vœux et tes offrandes, il a vu tes aumônes et tes bonnes œuvres; descends en ta maison, ta femme Anne deviendra enceinte et te donnera une lards et toute l'assistance, émus de joie, bénirent la toute bénie enfant Marie, et retournèrent chez eux en glorifiant Dieu.

Va à Jérusalem, et lorsque tu seras arrivée à la porte dite d'Or, ton mari Joachim, venant du désert, t'y rencontrera. Ce sera un signe pour toi. Et Anne répondit : Vive le Seigneur, mon Dieu; si je mets au monde un garçon ou une fille, je le présenterai comme une offrande au Seigneur Dieu, et il sera son serviteur tous les jours de sa vie.

Alors Anne se leva, se rendit à Jérusalem; arrivée à la porte que lui avait désignée l'ange, elle rencontra avec joie Joachim qui revenait du désert, emmenant avec lui dix brebis blanches, sans taches, offrande au nom du Seigneur Dieu, et douze génisses tendres et belles, pour les prêtres et les vieillards, et cent boucs, pour tout le peuple. Ils se virent avec grande joie, se racontèrent mutuellement la vision qu'ils avaient eue, et rentrant dans la ville se rendirent au temple et se prosternèrent devant Dieu.

Lorsqu'elle eut trois ans, on la sevra. On fit venir les filles vierges d'Israël qui, portant des cierges allumés, conduisirent Marie au temple ainsi qu'on l'y avait vouée. Ils apportèrent avec elles des offrandes. Bien que Joachim disait : * Peut-être l'enfant se souviendra encore de son père et de sa mère, * B p. 130 a. qu'elle reste encore un certain temps à la maison. Mais Anne le pressa en disant : Accomplissons le vœu que nous avons fait.

Et lorsqu'ils conduisirent Marie au temple avec beaucoup d'offrandes, le grand prêtre Zacharie et les autres prêtres la reçurent, en la bénissant beaucoup, et l'admirent au service de Dieu dans le temple. Les parents, après avoir accompli leur vœu, retournèrent chez eux.

Marie croissait de jour en jour et se perfectionnait dans toutes sortes de bien et dans les lois. Elle aimait Dieu d'un cœur ardent et avait toujours des apparitions d'anges et des visions divines. Lorsqu'elle eut accompli ses quatorze ans, le grand prêtre voulut marier la sainte Vierge, selon l'usage des autres vierges qui se trouvaient dans le temple, et par révélation de Dieu il la confia à Joseph, qui était de la maison de David, âgé de quarante ans, et avait des enfants de sa première femme, alors défunte. Il bénit la couronne de leur mariage. Joseph servit la sainte vierge trente et un ans.

30 NAVASARD, 9 Septembre.

De nouveau fête de la nativité de la mère de Dieu et mémoire de Joachim et d'Anne. En ce jour, fête d'Isaac le Parthe.

Le grand Isaac, le saint patriarche des Arméniens, était fils du grand Nersès, le catholicos des Arméniens, de la famille de saint Grégoire. Il fut en effet le second illuminateur du pays, car il inventa les lettres de la langue arménienne, par une faveur céleste, avec le vardapet Mesrob. Il traduisit en arménien le Nouveau et l'Ancien Testament.

Il recueillit de toutes les provinces des enfants intelligents et possédant de belles voix et doués de force d'haleine. Il enseigna tout le pays, construisant des écoles partout; c'est ce qu'il fit également dans le pays de la Géorgie et des Albanais, en y envoyant le vardapet [Docteur] Mesrob.

* A fol. 30 rº b. * C'est lui qui institua des règles universelles pour les évêques et les prêtres séculiers et réguliers, pour qu'ils ne soient pas troublés au sujet des bénéfices. Il composa les quatre prières de la nuit avec leurs Karoz et Hankist.

Il vivait au temps de l'empereur Théodose le Jeune des Grecs et du roi Hasguerd [Hisdeguerde] des Perses, et de Khosrow, Vramchapouh et Artachès, les derniers rois d'Arménie.

Եւ յընկենուլն զԱրտաշիր ի թագաւորութենէ Պարսից թագաւորին՝ մատնութեամբ իշխանացն Հայոց, սա ոչ միաբանեցաւ ի խորհուրդս նոցա, այլ ի բաց կացեալ յաթոռոյն նստէր յանապատս, սուգ ունելով ի վերայ աշխարհի որպէս Սամուէլն ի վերայ Սաւուղայ ։

Lorsque le roi des Perses fit abdiquer la royauté à Artachir, par la trahison des princes d'Arménie, Isaac ne prit pas part à leurs desseins, et s'éloignant de son siège, se retira dans une solitude, en pleurant sur le pays, comme l'avait fait Samuel pour Saül.

Les satrapes d'Arménie vinrent le trouver, prenant à leur charge toute la faute, et le prièrent à genoux de revenir réoccuper le siège. Il leur narra la vision divine qu'il avait eue dans la ville de Vagarshapat, dans la grande église métropolitaine [Catholiké], avant qu'il fût sacré patriarche, d'après laquelle la royauté serait enlevée à la dynastie des Archakounis et le patriarcat à la famille de saint Grégoire, et d'autres événements douloureux qui devaient s'accomplir dans le pays d'Arménie. Alors on le laissa vivre * à sa guise. * A fol. 30 v° a.

Le saint occupa le siège du catholicos cinquante-six ans et s'endormit d'une mort paisible le 30 Navasard, le 9 septembre, laissant un bon souvenir à toutes les églises.

En ce jour, martyre de saint Sévérianos de Sébaste.

Le martyr du Christ Sévérianos était de la ville de Sébaste, aux jours de l'empereur Maximien, l'impie. Il servait et soignait tous les saints qui se trouvaient dans les prisons et dans les liens, attendant le martyre pour le Christ.

On le saisit et le conduisit en présence du chef Lysias; il confessa le Christ devant l'assemblée. Le chef ordonna de le frapper avec des nerfs de bœuf et de lui déchirer le corps avec des onglets de fer. On lui attacha ensuite au pied une lourde pierre et on le pendit sur le rempart de la ville. Il rendit son âme à Dieu en priant. Quelques chrétiens cachèrent son corps. Saint Sévérianos mourut le 9 septembre.

Elle vient après la glorieuse et très sainte nativité de la toujours vierge et de celle qui est bénie entre les femmes, la sainte et bienheureuse mère de notre Seigneur, de celle qui enleva le péché et supprima les malédictions, et par qui les malédictions des douleurs de l'enfantement furent enlevées et la peine de mort changée en la grâce de la vie; d'elle qui fut l'espoir de nos pères et l'accomplissement de l'espérance des patriarches; qui mit le sceau sur les prédictions des prophètes et devait en être l'exécution, apportant le salut à toute la terre; dont la naissance fut comme la véritable aurore qui anéantit les ténèbres de la nuit des péchés et l'ombre de l'enfer; un rayon lumineux brillant au sommet des montagnes, c'est-à-dire sortant comme une branche des personnes justes comme ses parents, entraînant et apportant avec elle le lever du soleil de justice et de la science de Dieu du jour du salut.

Aussi, nous la considérons et croyons enfant de joie pour toute la terre, bien avant Joachim et Anne. Car, tous ayant péché et étant privés de la gloire de Dieu, si le Seigneur des armées ne nous avait, à l'accomplissement et à la fin des temps, donné cette enfant, parmi les grappes de raisin, c'est-à-dire des reins des ancêtres et de * la semence des justes patriarches, * B p. 131 b. elle dont la naissance fut comparée dans la pensée et dans la profondeur des puissantes paroles des prophètes, assimilée à une semence de bénédiction, parole accomplie aujourd'hui, car elle parut ouvertement à la terre, et c'est d'elle que poussa le vrai cep de vigne, le Verbe unique, dont les branches soignées et cultivées par Dieu remplirent tout l'univers, vraiment nous aurions été comme Sodome et Gomorrhe, la vigne de Sodome ayant des ceps et des grappes d'amertume.

Puisque nous nous trouvons avoir cette grappe de bénédiction, elle devrait être pour nous, à l'exemple des enfants qui aspirent et pressent les seins de consolation, et toutes les créatures intellectuelles devraient s'en réjouir avec intensité, en la pressant la grappe, dans le mystère de cette fête, avec une ivresse spirituelle, qui ne passe point.

Or, par sa bienheureuse naissance, ses justes, saints et légitimes parents Joachim et Anne, qui en récompense de leurs vertus reçurent celle qui était la grâce et un don pour l'univers, la virent comme une joie autant pour les anges que pour Dieu, comme l'allégresse des justes et des pécheurs ; car elle devait faire disparaître la tristesse, ayant de ses propres oreilles entendu [par l'annonciation de l'archange] la nouvelle joyeuse, elle devait attirer cette même la maison de saint Grégoire et de tous les événements fâcheux qui devaient arriver aux Arméniens. Alors ils le laissèrent vivre à sa volonté, car dès son enfance il avait aimé la vie solitaire et le silence de la paix.

Car il aimait beaucoup la prière, était adonné aux jeûnes et à l'abstinence et zélé dans tous les exercices de la vertu. Il aimait aussi les bonnes œuvres, donnait beaucoup d'aumônes, aimait prendre soin des pauvres et des malades et visitait souvent les veuves et les orphelins. Il se dépensait aussi avec ardeur à l'enseignement de la parole de Dieu, il convertissait beaucoup parmi les infidèles, dirigeait la plupart des pécheurs et éclairait tout le pays d'Arménie.

Il organisait les églises et les couvents, rehaussait les fêtes divines et instituait la mémoire des saints. Il avait une âme suave comme Moïse, était plein des grâces de Dieu, qui brillaient sur sa figure et dans ses paroles.

Tout le temps qu'il resta au patriarcat, il ne négligea jamais de mener en sa propre personne la vie des ermites, ayant auprès de lui des élèves moines au nombre de plus de soixante, vêtus comme lui de cilice. Le soir ils ne se nourrissaient que d'un plat de légumes et d'herbage et passaient le plus souvent la nuit en priant Dieu, principalement tous les dimanches et les jours de fête. Il visitait avec ces moines tout le monde, prêchait et enseignait, visitait les pauvres, et à ses moments de loisir ne s'arrêtait d'écrire et de traduire.

Le martyr du Christ Sévérianos était de la ville de Sébaste, aux jours de l'empereur Licinius, l'impie. Il était parent et collègue des quarante saints martyrs, qui furent martyrisés avant lui à Sébaste, que lui avait exhortés et encouragés au martyre. Il était du rang des sénateurs. Et comme il était fort riche, il soignait de ses propres biens et servait tous les saints qui se trouvaient en prison et dans les liens et qui attendaient le martyre pour le Christ.

Les païens l'ayant saisi le conduisirent en présence du chef Lysias. Il confessa le Christ devant l'assemblée, alors le chef ordonna de le frapper avec des nerfs de bœuf et de lui déchirer le corps avec des onglets de fer. On lui attacha ensuite aux pieds une très grosse pierre et on le suspendit aux murs

AVERTISSEMENT

Agapius (Mahboub) le Grec, fils de Constantin, évêque de Menbidj (xe siècle de notre ère), dont j'offre au public le texte arabe et la traduction française, est un écrivain arabe chrétien presque inconnu dans la littérature historique. En effet, on ne le trouve ni dans l'ouvrage de Wüstenfeld Die Geschichtschreiber der Araber und ihre Werke, ni dans la Geschichte der arabischen Litteratur de Brockelmann, ni dans la Littérature arabe de Ch. Huart (Paris, 1902), ni dans le livre encore plus récent, consacré spécialement à la littérature arabe-chrétienne, Die christlich-arabische Literatur de G. Graf (1905). K. Krumbacher ne connaît pas non plus Agapius dans son excellente histoire de la Littérature byzantine, où d'autres chroniqueurs arabes chrétiens, comme Yahya d'Antioche et al-Makin, ont trouvé leur place. Ce n'est qu'en 1907, que nous trouvons quelques lignes sur Agapius dans le précis de la Littérature chrétienne-arabe de C. Brockelmann[1], qui a puisé ses renseignements dans mon article du Vizantiysky Vremennik « Agapius de Manbidj, historien chrétien arabe du xe siècle » (en russe).

Agapius, d'après l'époque où il vivait, est le premier historien arabe-chrétien. Cependant il ne serait pas exact de dire que le nom d'Agapius (Mahboub) et les manuscrits de son histoire n'étaient pas connus du monde savant. En 1742 Assémani, dans son Catalogue des manuscrits orientaux de la Bibliothèque laurentienne de Florence, a décrit d'une manière plus ou moins détaillée (pas trop exacte du reste) le manuscrit CXXXII, qui contient la seconde partie de l'histoire de Mahboub. En 1835 dans le Catalogus codicum manuscriptorum orientalium Bibliothecae Bodlejanae nous trouvons la description du ms. LI (Hunt 478 a. 1320), qui contient la première partie de l'histoire d'Agapius[1].

1. Die christlich-arabische Litteratur, dans la série d'Ahmelang, Die Litteraturen des Ostens in Einzeldarstellungen.

Le premier qui s'intéressa à cet écrivain, était feu le baron V. Rosen, éminent savant russe, dont la mort prématurée et inattendue a péniblement frappé tous les orientalistes et les byzantinistes († 10/23 janvier 1908). Après avoir parcouru le manuscrit de Florence et en avoir fait quelques extraits, il a publié en 1884 l'article suivant dans le Journal du Ministère de l'Instruction publique (en Russie) : Notices sur la chronique d'Agapius de Manbidj (en russe). Malheureusement cet article est resté inconnu non seulement à l'étranger, mais même en Russie.

C'est le baron Rosen, dont j'ai l'honneur d'être élève et à la mémoire duquel je dédie cette édition, qui a attiré mon attention sur cet historien.

Le Catalogus Porphyrianus[2] et celui de Mme Gibson[3] nous ont appris qu'il existait encore deux manuscrits d'Agapius au couvent du Mont Sinaï. Alors je me suis mis au travail : en 1902, pendant mon séjour au Sinaï, j'ai copié deux mss. qui se trouvent dans la Bibliothèque de ce couvent et qui ne contiennent que la première partie de la chronique, et en 1903 j'ai fait la copie du ms. de Florence, qui contient la seconde partie; il me manquait le ms. d'Oxford, que j'avais vu en 1907 et dont j'avais constaté l'importance. Mgr Graffin m'a procuré avec une extrême obligeance la photographie de ce manuscrit; de sorte que j'ai maintenant à ma disposition quatre manuscrits, sur lesquels je base le texte de ma publication.

1. Sur les détails et les renseignements complémentaires v. mon article « Агапій Манбиджскій, христіанскій арабскій историкъ X вѣка » dans le Vizantiysky Vremennik, XI (1904), p. 574-587. Comp. aussi le résumé de la communication de M. A. Vasiliev sur Agapius, faite au Congrès international des Orientalistes à Alger en 1905. Revue Africaine, 1905, NN. 259-258, p. 337-338.

2. Catalogus librorum manuscriptorum et impressorum Monasterii S. Catherinae in Monte Sinai ad fidem Codicis Porphyriani, N. IV, B. 18/135. Petropoli, 1891, p. 336 (N 164).

3. M. D. Gibson, Catalogue of the Arabic mss. in the convent of S. Catharine on Mount Sinai. London, 1894, p. 88 (N. 456) et 123-124 (N. 580) Studia Sinaitica, n° III.

Il existe encore des mss. d'Agapius, dont je n'ai pas pu me servir. Ainsi, dans le journal Al-Machrik (المشرق) de Beyrouth, se trouve la description d'un ms. d'Agapius, qui, d'après les extraits publiés dans ce catalogue, me paraît correspondre au ms. d'Oxford; nous y lisons également qu'il existe en Syrie plusieurs mss. d'Agapius [1].

Je commence à publier la première partie de la chronique d'Agapius, qui raconte l'histoire du monde avant le Christ et la vie du Messie. L'édition du texte de cette partie est basée sur trois manuscrits :

1) le ms. C; c'est le ms. d'Oxford LI (Hunt 478. Pusey), très bien écrit, daté (l'an 1320), que j'ai pris comme base de mon édition; 2) le ms. B; c'est le ms. de Sinaï 580, 21×16, 208 fol. (Gibson), aussi assez bien écrit, dont le texte correspond au ms. d'Oxford; 3) le ms. A; c'est le ms. de Sinaï 456, 27×18, 175 fol. (Gibson), plus récent; c'est une copie très abrégée et dont le texte diffère beaucoup des mss. susnommés; ce manuscrit contient différents traités, et la première partie d'Agapius y occupe les feuillets 103-164v, où le texte, s'arrêtant au milieu d'une phrase, est incomplet à la fin.

La seconde partie de la chronique d'Agapius, qui, j'ose l'espérer, suivra la première, est surtout intéressante pour les études historiques : elle donne beaucoup de renseignements sur l'histoire ancienne de l'Église, sur l'époque des Conciles Œcuméniques, sur l'histoire de Byzance et du Califat, surtout à l'époque de la transmission du pouvoir des Ommayades aux Abbasides.

Dans mon édition, j'ai tâché de reproduire, autant qu'il était possible, le texte tel que nous le trouvons dans les mss., sans restituer les formes classiques, et je suis sûr que les savants qui s'intéressent à la langue arabe-chrétienne, y trouveront assez de renseignements précieux et nouveaux.

Je remercie cordialement tous ceux qui ont bien voulu m'aider de leurs conseils et de leur concours dans mon travail, et en première ligne M. J. Kratchkovsky, jeune arabisant russe, le plus jeune élève de feu le baron Rosen, qui par son inépuisable obligeance mérite une place à part dans ma gratitude, — qui m'aida, dans ce travail pénible, grâce à sa connaissance érudite de la langue arabe. Qu'il me soit également permis d'adresser mes vifs remerciements à M. N. Marr, professeur à l'Université de S.-Pétersbourg, qui a bien voulu m'accorder en abondance ses conseils précieux et sa connaissance si profonde des langues et des littératures orientales. J'adresse aussi l'expression de ma sincère gratitude à M. P. Kokovzoff, membre de l'Académie des sciences à S.-Pétersbourg; à mon confrère M. A. von Boulmerincq, professeur à l'Université de Youryev (Dorpat); à M. L. Leroy, professeur aux facultés d'Angers, et à M. E. Blochet, de la Bibliothèque nationale à Paris.

Des gens intelligents et versés dans la connaissance des choses qui, comme vous les voyez, se passent selon l'ordre de la nature depuis les origines du monde, savent que le commencement du temps, l'origine des choses créées, l'ordre des années et des jours comptent depuis le temps d'équinoxe à l'entrée du soleil dans la tête du Bélier, c'est-à-dire l'équateur. avaient réduit de cent ans les années d'Adam et des autres patriarches avant la naissance de leurs enfants et les avaient ajoutés aux années de leur vie après la naissance de leurs enfants. Hanan (Anne) et Caïphe, grands prêtres des Juifs, voulurent réfuter l'avènement du Messie et disaient que le temps de son avènement n'était pas encore arrivé. Les Juifs écrivirent : Adam vécut 130 ans et engendra Seth; du jour de la naissance de Seth à la naissance d'Énos 105 ans; du jour de la naissance d'Énos à la naissance de Kaïnan — 90 ans; du jour de la naissance de Kaïnan à la naissance de Mahalalaïl — d'années d'après la Torah mutilée. Sous ce rapport la version des Septante s'accorde avec la Torah mutilée des Juifs. Quant à l'accord des années de Jared dans la vraie Torah et dans la Torah mutilée des Juifs, c'est un des arguments qui indiquent la corruption et la défectuosité (de ce dernier texte). Il y a encore une autre raison pour cela : si les Juifs avaient réduit (les années) de tous les (patriarches), il se fût trouvé qu'Adam aurait vécu presque jusqu'au déluge et jusqu'à la 174me année * après la naissance de Noé. * B 21. Mais les prêtres juifs ne voulaient pas de scandale ; cependant ils tombèrent dans ce qu'ils avaient cherché à éviter, ce qu'on voit d'après les preuves et les témoignages des livres, que nous établirons et vérifierons plus loin, de sorte que la vérité de la Torah, traduite par les soixante-dix commentateurs, sera manifestée, si Dieu le veut.

Quarante ans après la naissance de Jared se termina * le premier millénaire de l'histoire du monde, d'après la version des Septante. * C 17 v. C'est l'explication et l'exemple de ce que nous avons dit (de la manière de calculer) ; cela suffira à celui qui voudra compter toutes les années de l'histoire du monde. Nous avons déjà dit que les années qui comptent, sont celles qui s'écoulèrent avant la naissance de leurs enfants ; elles comptent dans la chronologie générale du monde. * Quant aux années qu'ils vécurent après la naissance de leurs * B 21 v.

cend dans la région du sud, de la tête de la Balance jusqu'à celle du Capricorne; ce sont les degrés dont nous avons parlé, — vingt-trois degrés et cinquante et une minutes. Alors c'est le jour qui commence à diminuer * et la nuit à s'accroître jusqu'à ce que le soleil arrive dans la première minute du Capricorne. Ensuite le soleil se meut en montant et monte de la région du sud vers l'Équateur, de la tête du Capricorne jusqu'à la tête du Bélier. A ce moment le jour commence à s'accroître et la nuit à diminuer; le soleil, comme nous avons raconté, s'incline dans son élévation et sa descente * de vingt-trois degrés et cinquante et une minutes, parce que le soleil traverse le centre du Zodiaque, à droite * et à gauche. Quant à la déclinaison du soleil, que nous voyons, elle se produit en avant de la courbure du Zodiaque. Le soleil, la lune, les astres et les cinq planètes se meuvent d'occident en orient dans un sens contraire à la rotation de la sphère, parce que la sphère tourne d'orient en occident. Le soleil se meut autant au-dessous de la terre, qu'au-dessus d'elle; il y a toujours au-dessus de la terre la figure du Zodiaque et au-dessous d'elle encore la figure du Zodiaque; lorsque l'une apparaît, l'autre disparaît. * Quant au reste de la terre, on ne sait pas s'il est habité ou désert; il comprend les onze douzièmes du globe; il n'y a qu'une seule partie sur douze qui soit habitée.

Dans cette partie, qui est le pays habité, il se trouve des mers et des déserts. Le chercheur qui veut se rendre compte des choses, nous demandera peut-être s'il y a * dans ces onze parties, de la végétation, des animaux, des mers, comme chez nous dans notre unique partie; nous répondrons : la terre, qui a été habitée avant nous, ne dépasse pas les limites dont nous avons parlé; quant à ce qui se trouve au delà, personne n'y est entré et personne n'en est venu chez nous. Les opinions * et les idées des savants tombent d'accord, et aucune personne intelligente ne nie que le soleil, la lune et les étoiles se meuvent chez nous, et que ce mouvement produit l'été, l'hiver, le printemps et l'automne, ce que tout le monde sait. Si le soleil se lève au-dessus de tous les endroits de la surface de la terre, comme chez nous, de même que la lune et les étoiles, il est nécessaire qu'il y ait des plantes, des animaux, des mers et des montagnes, comme chez nous. C'est pourquoi certains raisonnent ainsi : si, dans les sept climats, le soleil, la lune et les étoiles se meuvent, comme nous l'avons dit, il est également nécessaire que la terre comme nous l'avons décrite, soit habitée à partir * de l'équateur, * c'est-à-dire la moitié de la sphère terrestre du côté du nord et (l'autre) moitié de la sphère terrestre, c'est-à-dire à partir de l'équateur du côté du sud; il doit y avoir aussi un climat, autour de ces sept climats qui se trouvent dans la région du nord. Outre la division que nous venons de donner, les anciens avaient partagé la terre, ses pays et ses villes en douze

670 ans; depuis Adam et le commencement du monde jusqu'à cette année-là, il s'écoula 2926 ans. Voici l'explication de ce calcul : Sem engendra Arphaxad deux ans après le déluge; les années d'Arphaxad depuis le jour de sa naissance jusqu'à celle de Kaïnan, son fils, furent de 135 ans; depuis le jour de la naissance de Kaïnan jusqu'à celle de Sçaleh, son fils, elles furent de 139 ans; depuis le jour de la naissance de Sçaleh * jusqu'à celle d'Haber, son fils, elles furent de 130 ans; depuis le jour de la naissance d'Haber jusqu'à ce qu'Haber engendra Phaleg, son fils, * de 134 ans; depuis le jour de la naissance de Phaleg jusqu'à ce qu'il engendra Ar'û, de 132 ans. Cela donne 670 ans. Si l'on y ajoute les années depuis Adam jusqu'à l'année du déluge, c'est-à-dire 2256 ans, on aura un total de 2926 ans. Ce compte est fait d'après la version des Septante, qui traduisirent la Torah et tous les livres des prophètes conformément à la vérité. Quant à ce que nous trouvons dans la Torah qui est entre les mains des Juifs, à cause de * la réduction et la mutilation qu'ils lui ont fait subir, et dans la Torah syriaque qui en est copiée, il y est écrit que Sem engendra Arphaxad deux ans après le déluge, et depuis le jour de la naissance d'Arphaxad jusqu'à ce qu'il engendra Sçaleh, il s'écoula 35 ans; ils omirent Kaïnan, son fils, et, ayant supprimé de la Torah son nom et ses années, ils écrivirent * Sçaleh, son

Il est écrit qu'à cette époque parurent les fils de Yokthan, qui est le même que Kahthan; c'étaient trois chefs qui étaient des géants; l'un s'appela Saba, l'autre Ophir, le troisième Heval. Les fils de Kahthan commencèrent à faire la guerre contre les peuples et les tribus avec toutes les sortes d'armes et d'instruments, car ils furent les premiers qui se servirent des engins de guerre et qui les connurent. La première connaissance qu'ils en eurent et le premier usage qu'ils en firent leur furent suggérés par l'exemple des bêtes féroces. Quant à la lance, ils l'imitèrent d'après l'animal du Messie et après son ascension au Ciel. A cette époque deux grands prêtres des Juifs, Anne et Caïphe, désirèrent déclarer fausse la mission du Christ et réfuter le temps de son avènement, parce qu'ils avaient été effrayés de ce qu'un grand nombre de leurs chefs respectés et plus âgés avaient reconnu la mission du Christ pour eux et l'authenticité des miracles parmi eux, quand ils avaient vu la résurrection du Christ, comme il est écrit dans l'Évangile, à laquelle les chrétiens croyaient fermement. * Ils discutèrent contre eux, et une controverse eut lieu entre eux. Anne et Caïphe, les grands prêtres, alléguaient des arguments contre eux et affirmaient que le Messie dont les prophètes avaient prophétisé, ne viendrait qu'au dernier temps; mais, disaient-ils, nous sommes encore au milieu du temps du monde. Mais les autres se détournèrent d'eux; * alors eux, ayant en leur possession des bibliothèques, se mirent à retrancher ces années depuis Adam et le commencement du monde jusqu'à l'époque de Tarih et de la naissance d'Abraham; et à cause de l'éloignement de l'époque et de l'ignorance * de la plupart des hommes, comme nous l'avons déjà dit, ils retranchèrent des années de l'histoire du monde, depuis Adam jusqu'à l'époque d'Abraham, * 1389 ans; lorsqu'ils l'eurent arrangé entre eux, en secret, ils le firent voir à leurs compagnons et à tous les hommes qui étaient d'accord avec eux dans leur désir de la mort du Messie. Ils firent cette falsification après la Résurrection du Christ, tandis que la traduction des Septante fut achevée environ 300 ans avant l'Avènement du Christ. Nous raconterons sans doute l'histoire de Ptolémée Philadelphe et des soins qu'il donna à la traduction des livres sacrés et leur explication, jusqu'à ce que nous arrivions à la fin, si Dieu le veut.

Le commencement de cette histoire remonte à l'époque de Ptolémée et d'Alexandre Dou-l-Karnéin, le plus grand roi. Dans cette histoire nous expliquerons la corruption des Juifs et la réduction des années qu'ils ont faite, si Dieu le veut.

Son empire fut partagé entre ses quatre serviteurs qui étaient ses gardes du corps. Le livre sacré les appelle ses serviteurs [1]. L'un d'entre eux fut Ptolémée Philadelphe, roi d'Alexandrie, au sujet duquel nous avons déjà dit que les Septante, savants juifs, lui avaient traduit la Torah et tous les Livres des Prophètes de l'hébreu en grec. Il ne faut pas croire que ce récit soit anticipé et ait été mis dans un endroit où il ne s'agissait pas de son temps, mais il était nécessaire de le mentionner plus haut, parce que la réduction * et la corruption des années atteignent l'époque * de Tarih et de la naissance d'Abraham. Il nous fallait expliquer et indiquer les motifs et les raisons qui firent que Ptolémée Philadelphe se préoccupa de la traduction des livres sacrés et la désira, pour montrer exactement aux savants les motifs et les raisons pour lesquels les grands prêtres * juifs, Anne et Caïphe, s'appliquèrent hardiment à la corruption et la réduction, et pour expliquer aux gens intelligents, aux savants et aux investigateurs, comment ils furent mis au grand jour et comment ces passages, mutilés et réduits par eux, furent reconnus, lorsqu'on les étudia et les examina.

sa mort, les bienfaits qu'il en avait reçus. Sur ces entrefaites il établit * le compte des années d'après son nom et fixa le début de cette ère au premier jour de la conquête de la Syrie, l'année 13 de son règne. Depuis Adam jusqu'à cette année-ci, qui est la première année du règne de Dou-l-Karnéin, les années de l'histoire du monde sont de 5197 ans, que nous expliquerons plus tard, si Dieu le veut. A cette époque régna Ptolémée Philadelphe pour qui, comme nous l'avons déjà raconté, les Livres sacrés étaient été traduits; il régna sur l'Égypte 38 ans. * Il affranchit de la captivité les peuples qui étaient dans son royaume, au nombre de 130.000, dont 30.000 Juifs. Tout d'abord, il y a sur lui une allusion dans les Livres sacrés, où il est écrit qu'il fut un des grands rois étrangers, appelé Ptolémée Philadelphe. On rapporte qu'il ressemblait à Alexandre par sa puissance, et lui était supérieur en science, en sagesse et en philosophie; * tous ses soins et tout son plaisir * ne tendaient qu'à la philosophie, à la lecture des livres, à toutes les sciences et à la connaissance de leurs mystères; il les propageait, en les rassemblant dans tous les pays et toutes les contrées, de sorte qu'il les cultiva toutes; c'étaient les sciences dont nous avons parlé : l'astronomie, l'astrologie, la géométrie, l'arithmétique * et d'autres que nous avons mentionnées. La fin de l'histoire d'Abraham.

Maintenant que nous avons déjà expliqué et raconté l'histoire de l'interprétation et de la traduction des Septante, les efforts et les recherches du roi Constantin sur la raison du désaccord qu'il avait trouvé dans les Livres Sacrés, nous allons revenir au récit de l'époque d'Abraham; c'est le point où nous sommes parvenus avant de commencer cette histoire.

Abraham, ayant vécu 100 ans, engendra de Sara Isaac; mais 16 ans avant Isaac, il engendra d'Agar Ismaël. Nous commençons par Isaac, parce que les années de l'histoire du monde sont comptées d'après Isaac. Abraham engendra * de Ketura, après la mort de Sara, un grand nombre d'enfants puissants; * ils furent appelés les fils de Cadir (du Puissant) et leurs enfants s'appelaient aussi, à cause d'Ismaël, Modar. Abraham vécut, après la naissance d'Isaac, 75 ans et, sa vie ayant été de 175 ans, il mourut 40 ans après la naissance de Jacob. A cette époque mourut le roi Boulis et après lui régna Ninos, son fils, qui bâtit la ville de Ninive ainsi appelée d'après son nom. La cinquième année après la naissance d'Abraham, Jérusalem fut bâtie par le roi Melchisédec. * B 91 v. * C 68.

* Le premier roi des Sicyonites fut Aglaous [1], qui régna sur eux 53 ans. * B 92.

En l'an 71 après la naissance d'Abraham éclatèrent les guerres et les conflits entre le roi Kodollogomor et les cinq rois du pays de Sodome et de Gomorrhe; elles durèrent pendant 14 ans jusqu'à * la 10e année après la sortie d'Abraham du pays d'Oura des Kaldéens, qui était le pays de Canaan, fils de Cham, fils de Noé. A cette époque fut bâtie la ville d'Hébron. * C 68 v.

la naissance d'Isaac, Sara mourut à l'âge de 127 ans, parce qu'elle était âgée de 90 ans lorsqu'elle mit au monde Isaac à Abraham. En l'an 44 de sa naissance, Isaac se maria avec Rébecca, fille de Bathuel, cousin de son père Abraham. * A cette époque le roi Abimélec fit amitié avec Isaac; son royaume était situé à Gérar, au pays du Jourdain. A cette époque commença la domination des Philistins, qui sont les habitants de la Philistine (Palestine); leur race indique l'origine de leur pays. Jacob avait 89 ans quand il * engendra Lévi; la vie de Jacob fut de 147 ans. En l'an 20 de la naissance de Jacob, Ésaü, son frère, épousa des filles de Canaan, fils de Cham, fils de Noé; l'une d'entre elles était Judith, fille de Beéri, l'Héthéen, l'autre, Basmath, fille d'Élon l'Héthéen [1]. Lorsque Ésaü eut vu * qu'elles ne plaisaient pas à son père Isaac, il épousa Basmath, fille d'Ismaël. Il est écrit que Job le Juste tira son origine des enfants de Basmath, fille d'Ismaël. Il est écrit que Moïse, le prophète, écrivit le livre célèbre attribué à Job le Juste; dans ce livre, c'est-à-dire dans le livre de Job le Juste, il se trouve 1.548 versets.

A cette époque Hamor, frère de Sichem, bâtit une grande ville qu'il nomma Sichem, d'après le nom de son frère. Quelque temps après, deux fils de Jacob, Siméon et Lévi, la dévastèrent et y tuèrent trois mille hommes pour venger sur sa population leur sœur qui s'appelait Dina. la nuit, tourmentées par la faim, toutes les grues poussèrent des cris retentissants. * Les serpents, ayant entendu leurs cris, se sauvèrent dans la terre (* A 136 v.) de peur que les grues ne les mangeassent. Moïse ne cessa de faire cela jusqu'à ce qu'il atteignît la ville éthiopienne de Méroé. Lorsque les habitants l'eurent vu avec ses troupes, cela les frappa d'admiration et de crainte, * et (* B 105 v.) ils furent étonnés que de si nombreuses troupes fussent arrivées chez eux à travers ces déserts. Alors Dieu inspira la fille du roi d'Éthiopie et lui fit savoir avec certitude que Moïse s'emparerait de la ville et de ses habitants et que Dieu, qu'Il soit béni, l'en rendrait maître. C'est pourquoi elle envoya dire à Moïse qu'elle s'offrait à lui pour qu'il l'épousât ; (en retour) elle lui montrerait un endroit d'où l'on pouvait prendre la ville et s'emparer de ses environs. * (* C 78 v.) Moïse le lui accorda. Dieu lui ayant donné la victoire sur la ville et ses habitants, Moïse épousa la fille du roi d'Éthiopie. C'est pourquoi la sainte Écriture raconte que Mariam, sœur de Moïse, et Aaron, en parlant de Moïse, médisaient de lui, parce * qu'il avait épousé une femme Kouschite, c'est-à-dire (* B 106) des fils d'al-Khabaschat (une Éthiopienne)[1]. Dieu fut irrité contre Mariam, qui devint galeuse et lépreuse, de sorte que les Israélites l'éloignèrent d'eux.

son frère. Il eut pour successeur Éléazar, son fils. Moïse mourut deux ans après Aaron; il avait 120 ans. Après la mort de Moïse, ce fut Josué, fils de Noun, son serviteur, âgé de 83 ans, qui commença à gouverner les Israélites à la place de Moïse, deux ans après Aaron. Josué, fils de Noun, fit entrer les Israélites dans la terre promise de Canaan que Dieu avait promis de donner à la postérité d'Abraham. Après les avoir gouvernés pendant 27 ans,

De peur de ne pas réussir dans ce qu'il projetait à leur sujet, il adjura le soleil et la lune et dit : « Toi, ô soleil, arrête-toi sur Gabaon, et toi, lune, dans le champ d'Aïloun (Aialon)! » Et le soleil resta immobile

On raconte qu'à cette époque Dionysios, fils de Deucalion, aurait commencé à planter des vignes et à presser du vin; et les hommes en buvaient. Mais cela ne s'accorde pas avec ce que certaines gens racontaient dans leur ignorance : ils disaient que les premiers qui avaient appris à boire du vin et donné des indications sur ce sujet, auraient été les diables; mais nous avons également trouvé dans les Livres Sacrés qu'avant ce temps-là Noé avait planté des vignes, avait pressé du vin et en avait bu.

Alors Ahoud, ayant détaché son épée de sa cuisse, la lui enfonça dans le ventre, de sorte que ses entrailles en sortirent, et le tua; après cela il sortit. AVANT-PROPOS

I-III. — Aaron, Maxime, Domèce et Abraham sont tous antérieurs au concile de Chalcédoine et devraient donc être honorés par l'Église universelle si leurs légendes avaient quelques garanties d'authenticité. En fait, l'Église jacobite seule les a mis au nombre de ses saints. On lit dans ses calendriers au 28 mai : « Mort de saint Aaron, à la neuvième heure, le jour de la Pentecôte (en 337) », Le martyrologe de Rabban Sliba dans Anal. Boll., XXVII (1908), p. 153 et 184. C'est sans doute encore ce saint Aaron qui est mentionné au 22 octobre, Ibid., 166. Au même endroit, au 12 janvier : « Maxime et Domèce, fils de Valentin (ou Valens), fils de Jovinien », Ibid., p. 145 et 173. Enfin, au 18 avril : « Mort de saint Abraham, maître de saint Barsumas », Ibid., p. 151 et 180. Il semble donc très probable, a priori, que ces saints ont été imaginés par l'Église jacobite après le schisme et qu'ils lui sont donc restés en propre, sans pouvoir obtenir, dans l'Église universelle, le droit de cité auquel leurs miracles et l'époque de leur mort leur auraient donné droit.

L'étude intrinsèque des légendes confirme cette prévision. Celle de saint Aaron renferme un anachronisme (voilé en partie par un scribe [1]) qui met en relation son héros, mort en 337, avec Siméon stylite, né vers 390. De plus, il serait mort le dimanche de la Pentecôte, 28 mai, de l'an 337, mais, cette année-là, le 28 mai tombait un samedi et la Pentecôte le 22 mai. L'attribution de cette rédaction à Paul, disciple d'Aaron, est donc inexacte, car il n'aurait pas commis cette dernière faute; d'ailleurs, au VIe siècle, il ne semble pas y avoir de monastère d'Aaron, puisque Jean d'Asie, dans ses dénombrements des monastères jacobites, n'en fait pas mention. C'est du IXe au Xe siècle seulement que nous trouvons mentionné chez Bar Hébraeus, Chron. ecclés., I, 407, le monastère d'Aaron sur le mont Bérikâ. Nous sommes donc en droit de supposer que la légende d'Aaron a été composée en syriaque vers le IXe siècle, à l'aide de lieux communs glanés dans d'autres Vies, pour donner un illustre éponyme à deux monastères de la région de Mélitène construits, sous le vocable d'Aaron, du VIe au IXe siècle.

La légende de Maxime et Domèce n'est, comme nous le dirons, qu'une paraphrase d'un chapitre des Apophthegmes. Les deux saints grecs, contemporains de Macaire, qui ont donné leur nom au monastère de Baramous, ont chance d'avoir existé, mais leur nom n'a jamais été connu. Un auteur assez tardif, antérieur au Xe siècle, a imaginé leurs noms, leur généalogie, a complété leur histoire, et n'a pas hésité — avec cette inconsciente impudence dont on trouve tant d'exemples chez les Coptes — à se faire passer pour Peschoi (Bisoès) et à se donner pour le témoin oculaire des faits qu'il invente. Le syriaque est sans doute basé sur un texte copte ou arabe.

Nous n'avons à Paris qu'un extrait de la Vie d'Abraham de la Haute-Montagne, maître de Barsôma, mais il nous en donne une suffisante idée. Cette Vie semble avoir été composée en syriaque et attribuée à un disciple d'Abraham, pour donner plus de relief au célèbre Barsôma, qui partage avec Dioscore d'Alexandrie le rôle de protagoniste de l'hérésie monophysite. Non seulement on l'a gratifié (aussi bien que Dioscore) d'une histoire légendaire, mais on lui a encore donné un père spirituel digne de lui.

IV. — Maurice, empereur d'Orient de 582 à 602, a toujours été en communion avec la chaire de Pierre et il est étrange que les Jacobites le revendiquent et en fassent un martyr.

V. — Nous ajoutons ensuite les miracles de saint Ptolémée édités et traduits par M. L. Leroy d'après le manuscrit arabe n° 150 de la Bibliothèque nationale.

Ptolémée est un martyr égyptien bien antérieur au concile de Chalcédoine [1], qui devrait donc appartenir à l'Église universelle. En réalité nous ne le trouvons que chez les Coptes qui le fêtent au 11 Mésori (4 août). Le calendrier édité par Selden porte en effet à cette date ابطلماوس الشهيد بمنوف العليا « Ptolémée, martyr à Menouf (Memphis) supérieure », De synedriis veterum Ebraeorum, Francfort, 1696, p. 1341, et le calendrier d'Aboul-Barakat porte à la même date : Ptolemaei episcopi Menuf, dans Revue de l'Orient chrétien, 1908, p. 132 (évêque, indiqué par une simple lettre, est une faute pour martyr).

1. Cf. Eusèbe, Hist. eccl., VI, XLI, 22.

Il est certain d'ailleurs que la rédaction éditée ici est d'invention monophysite, car le rédacteur nous fournit un point de repère en nous racontant un miracle qui aurait eu lieu lors de l'invasion de l'Égypte par les Arabes. Il écrivait donc au plus tôt au VIIIe siècle.

Nous éditons ces récits pour permettre de comparer le merveilleux chez les Coptes jacobites au merveilleux chez les Syriens jacobites et les miracles coptes aux miracles syriens.

LA LÉGENDE D'AARON DE SAROUG

ÉCRITE PAR SON DISCIPLE PAUL

INTRODUCTION

Cette histoire est conservée à Londres dans un seul manuscrit syriaque : add. 12174, fol. 90-98. Elle raconte la vocation du saint (1-7), son voyage d'Arménie à Jérusalem (8-18), la fondation de deux monastères en Arménie (19-26), son voyage d'Arménie à Constantinople (27-43), et sa mort (44-47). Elle comprend en somme deux voyages — Jérusalem et Constantinople — et le récit des prodiges accomplis en cours de route. L'incident le plus frappant et qui donne une certaine unité à cette histoire, c'est la lutte du saint avec un chef de démons. Il le trouve en Syrie, à Kéfrâ Rabâ, près de Batnan, lorsqu'il se rend à Jérusalem ; il l'expulse (14). Il le retrouve en Arménie, installé dans une caverne qu'il devait plus tard transformer en monastère ; il l'expulse encore (24). Il le retrouve à Constantinople (25, 39), où il s'offre au saint pour lui porter jusqu'à son monastère d'Arménie « tout ce que l'empereur lui donnera » (40). Le démon espère porter beaucoup d'or et d'argent et s'enfuir en cours de route avec ce butin ; mais le saint, qui l'a reconnu, demande seulement à l'empereur une grande auge « en pierre d'aimant » pour abreuver les bêtes de somme du monastère (41). Le démon se fatigue bientôt de porter cette auge, alors le saint lui propose de l'enterrer afin que personne ne la voie plus et qu'on ne puisse rapporter à l'empereur qu'Aaron a jeté en cours de route le cadeau qu'il lui avait fait. Au moment où le démon mesure la fosse, le saint retourne l'auge sur lui et l'enferme ; c'est ainsi qu'il parvient à s'en débarrasser (42). Depuis lors, ce démon dit à ceux qui vont et viennent : « Est-ce que Aaron de Saroug ne revient pas? » Ils lui disent : « Non », et il se lamente en lui-même d'avoir voulu tromper le saint et il reste sous la pierre jusqu'aujourd'hui. La chronologie est en apparence très soignée. Le saint naît en 219 (48), entre au monastère en 224 (2-3), mène la vie érémitique de 234 à 264 (6-7), va en Arménie de 264-267 (8). Nous savons ensuite qu'il passe quatre ans à Batnan (15), trois ans moins un mois sur la montagne Berikâ, près de Mélitène (20), et deux ans et six mois au même endroit (23). Il meurt le dimanche de la Pentecôte, le 28 mai 337, à l'âge de cent dix-huit ans.

Bar Hébraeus, qui était originaire de Mélitène et qui devait donc connaître plus particulièrement les monastères d'Aaron, les mentionne plusieurs fois, Chron. eccl., édit. Abbeloos et Lamy, Louvain, 1872; I, 407, II, 397. Il écrit Ibid., I, 87, au commencement du IVe siècle : A cette époque vivait Aaron de Saroug, qui bâtit deux célèbres monastères au pays d'Arménie. Assémani croyait que le mont Berikâ (béni) était situé près d'Édesse [1] et les éditeurs de Bar Hébraeus ont repris cette opinion, Chron. eccl., I, 408, note 3; en réalité, il était à proximité de Mélitène.

C'est probablement notre Aaron qui figure encore dans le ms. 45 d'Oxford, fol. 257 : Office de saint Mar Aaron, grand parmi les ascètes. Il existe cependant encore un Aaron de Singar, jacobite, et un autre Aaron, nestorien, assez peu connus, et par suite difficiles à distinguer du nôtre. Cf. Anal. Boll., t. XXVII (1908), p. 167, au 8 Novembre; Catalogue de la Bibliothèque Vaticane, t. II, p. 277; Bar Hébraeus, Chron. ecclés., I, 438, 498; Catalogue des manuscrits syriaques de Berlin, p. 237; Liber superiorum, éd. Bedjan, Paris, 1901, p. 505.

riture; ce saint Mar Aaron s'attacha à lui et lui dit : « Je vais avec toi près du troupeau. » Ses parents lui dirent : « Non, mon fils, tu n'y iras pas, car la chaleur y brûle la beauté et noircit les couleurs de la figure, parce que cette région est aride et desséchée. » L'enfant tourmentait beaucoup ses parents, et le père très peiné, mais ne voulant pas le faire souffrir, l'assit sur une mule et le laissa partir avec le pâtre. Il demeura deux jours avec les bergers.

Le troisième jour, il vit ce monastère et il demanda aux (pâtres) : « Qu'est-ce que cela ? » Les pâtres lui répondirent : « C'est le lieu (d'habitation) des parfaits et aussi des hommes saints. » Il dit à l'un de ses serviteurs : « Conduis-moi en ce lieu, car je désire beaucoup le voir. » Le (serviteur) le prit et le conduisit au monastère; ils (y) arrivèrent sur les neuf heures et il fut béni par les solitaires qui y étaient. Il dit alors à son serviteur : « Je désire beaucoup demeurer près de ces saints hommes; va près du troupeau, et demain, viens me chercher. » Le serviteur se mit à rire à son sujet * et lui dit : « Que veux-tu (faire) ici ? Est-ce pour prier ? » — Enfin son serviteur lui obéit et alla près du troupeau. Ce saint demeura toute cette nuit près des solitaires

Le saint Mar Aaron fléchit le genou devant le supérieur et lui dit : « Je demande, seigneur, à demeurer avec toi et à être ton disciple. » Les moines rirent de lui et dirent : « Quoi! celui-là veut être moine! » Le supérieur prophétisa à son sujet sous (l'inspiration de) l'Esprit saint et dit : « Bienheureux les parents qui ont engendré cet enfant; je vous le dis : beaucoup d'hommes entreront dans le royaume du ciel grâce à cet enfant. »

Lève-toi, viens, allons près de ton père; ensuite fais ce que tu veux. » Ce saint lui dit :« Ne te lamente pas davantage, va près de tes maîtres et dis-leur (de ma part) : Je ne viens plus près de vous, maintenant ni jamais. » Le serviteur, pleurant amèrement, s'en alla près de ses maîtres qui lui demandèrent : « Où est Aaron? » Il leur raconta ce que le saint avait dit; à ces paroles, ils pleurèrent amèrement.

6. Ses parents se mirent en route; ils prirent une grande somme d'argent et allèrent à ce monastère où ils furent bénis par les saints qui l'habitaient. * Son père lui dit : « Mon fils, si c'est à cause du travail et de la fatigue (occasionnée par) les troupeaux que tu es irrité contre nous, laisse les troupeaux et viens te reposer à la maison. » Alors le saint leur dit : « Ne vous tourmentez pas et ne pleurez pas, car je ne veux plus retourner chez vous. » Ils furent saisis d'une grande douleur à l'occasion du bienheureux qui leur dit : « Donnez-moi l'héritage qui me revient de la maison, parce que j'ai vu la vraie lumière et je veux demeurer en elle; car j'ai connu la vraie voie, celle qui est proposée à tous ceux qui aiment le Christ. » Alors ils firent le partage et lui donnèrent ce qui lui revenait de l'héritage de la maison. Il prit cet héritage et le donna aux solitaires qui étaient là. Ses parents s'en retournèrent et s'en allèrent pleins de tristesse. Le saint demeura durant dix ans avec ces solitaires, il apprit le chant des psaumes et toute la règle de la pure conduite des moines.

7. Il choisit la vie solitaire. — Il s'agenouilla ensuite devant toute la communauté et il dit : « Mes pères et mes frères, je vous en supplie, mença à opérer de nombreux miracles par l'entremise de son serviteur Mar Aaron.

9. Guérison d'un paralytique. — Il y avait un village au-dessus de lui où demeurait un homme très riche. Lorsque cet homme allait paître son troupeau, il allait en dessus de l'endroit où demeurait saint Mar Aaron, où il était constamment en prière. Or cet homme avait un fils paralytique depuis le ventre de sa mère et qui ne pouvait marcher. Ce pâtre vit Mar Aaron et il fut saisi de crainte, parce que son vêtement était une tunique de poils; il lui cria et lui dit : « Si tu es un homme, parle avec moi. » Le saint lui dit : « Je suis un homme, je suis ici pour un peu de temps et bientôt je vais partir. » Le pâtre lui dit : « Je vois, seigneur, que tu es un homme juste, mais je t'en prie, j'ai un fils paralytique depuis sa naissance. Si tu le permets, je te l'amènerai pour que tu pries sur lui; peut-être, seigneur, grâce à tes saintes prières, Dieu aura-t-il pitié de lui et le guérira-t-il. » Le saint lui dit : « Promets-moi de ne le dire à personne. » Il lui promit de ne le dire à personne et il lui amena son fils. Le saint l'oignit d'huile au nom de Notre Seigneur et il fut guéri. Il s'en alla et il marchait plein de joie et louant Dieu. Il entra dans le

Ils lui disaient : « Où as-tu été guéri? » et : « Qui t'a guéri? » L'enfant leur répondit : « Dieu a opéré un miracle envers moi »; mais ils le pressèrent jusqu'à ce qu'il leur racontât comment il avait été guéri et qui l'avait guéri. * fol. 91 r° b.

10. Ils coururent, hommes et femmes ensemble, à l'endroit où se trouvait le bienheureux. Ils trouvèrent le bienheureux Mar Aaron agenouillé en prières et ils lui demandèrent de les suivre, mais il ne le voulut pas. Ils le firent savoir à l'évêque de la ville et l'évêque descendit vers cet endroit accompagné de beaucoup de gens, mais ils ne trouvèrent pas le saint, car il avait quitté cette place. Comme ils remontaient, ils le trouvèrent dans une caverne et, quand il eut terminé l'office de None, ils lui dirent : « Notre maître, salut. » Il les reçut comme un père reçoit ses enfants chéris et il se réjouit avec eux. Ils lui dirent : « Veux-tu bien, seigneur, entrer dans la ville avec tes serviteurs? et ils seront bénis par les saintes empreintes de tes pieds. » Il accepta; ils le conduisirent et le firent entrer dans la ville.

12. Aaron reçoit la prêtrise. — Le bienheureux quitta cet homme et entra dans le temple de Mar André. Beaucoup de malades venaient le trouver et étaient guéris par lui; Dieu opérait par les mains de son serviteur Mar Aaron tant de prodiges qu'une bouche de chair (un homme) ne peut pas les raconter. L'évêque Mar Théodore vint demander à Mar Aaron d'être prêtre et de recevoir la prêtrise des mains de l'évêque. A la fin, il fut contraint par le peuple et par Mar Théodore, * et il reçut de lui l'ordination de la prêtrise le saint dimanche de la Pentecôte. Le saint pria sur l'évêque et sur sa ville, puis il la quitta, vint à la ville nommée Édesse (Ourhoï), et entra au monastère des Orientaux.

Il amena sa fille; (Aaron) l'oignit d'huile au nom de Notre Seigneur et ce démon sortit en se plaignant et en disant : « Qu'ai-je à faire avec toi, Aaron de Saroug, qui es venu pour me chasser de ma demeure! » Cette (fille) crut (se convertit); son père, toute sa maison et une grande quantité des infidèles crurent en lui lorsqu'ils virent ce prodige qu'il avait fait, et les habitants de la ville commencèrent de venir près de lui. (Ce démon) avait une apparence humaine; il entrait dans ce village et en sortait, il était prompt et léger, et ceux qui le voyaient étaient effrayés par lui; il effrayait surtout les maîtres de cette maison. Quand le chef de famille entendit la renommée de l'élu Mar Aaron, il alla à Batnan et il raconta au saint ce qui concernait ce démon. Le saint partit avec lui et ils arrivèrent à l'oratoire qui est au nord du village. Les seigneurs du village vinrent à la suite du saint Mar Aaron * et demandèrent au saint de descendre * fol. 91 v b.

à la demeure où était ce démon. Cette demeure était au sud du village, et à l'est de cette demeure il y avait un fleuve. Le démon s'aperçut (de l'arrivée) du saint et il courut lui tendre des embûches afin, si c'était possible, de l'empêcher de faire ce trajet. Il arracha de la mauve et il en mit sur les pierres par où venait le saint pour (traverser) ce fleuve. Lorsque le bienheureux passa sur ces pierres, il glissa, tomba et son pied fut blessé. Il commanda à ceux qui l'accompagnaient de le porter et de le conduire à cette demeure. Lorsque le démon vit le saint arriver et entrer par la porte de la demeure, il monta au-dessus de la porte et il lui dit : « Pourquoi me chasses-tu de cette maison? Voilà vingt-sept ans que j'y suis et personne ne m'en a chassé, si ce n'est toi. » Le saint lui dit : « Tu n'as pas permission de demeurer dans le pays de Syrie. » Le démon dit à l'illustre (saint) : « Puisque tu me chasses du pays de Syrie, je vais réunir tous mes amis et mes compagnons que tu chasses avec moi de ce pays, et j'irai habiter dans le pays d'Arménie. » Le saint chassa le démon avec tous ses compagnons de cette demeure; ce démon réunit ses compagnons et alla demeurer dans cette caverne du pays d'Arménie où est aujourd'hui le monastère de saint Mar Aaron.

le saint retourna à Batnan, à l'endroit où il habitait, et il s'attacha à cet endroit au point de vouloir y demeurer et même y terminer sa vie. Il demanda aux seigneurs du village et à tout le peuple la permission d'y rester et d'y bâtir un monastère; ils consentirent et il y bâtit un monastère. Il y demeura quatre ans. Des moines solitaires arrivèrent et vinrent (à ce monastère), après quoi Mar Aaron pria * sur eux et reçut aussi leurs prières, puis il se mit en marche pour aller à Jérusalem. * fol. 92 r° a.

16. Délivrance miraculeuse de cinq chrétiens. — Il fit route et passa par le pays d'Antioche, puis il arriva à une ville nommée 'Acouh (Acre?). Les seigneurs de cette ville étaient païens. Il y avait là cinq chrétiens et les païens voulaient les mettre à mort, car il y avait un païen (qui habitait) dans le voisinage de ces chrétiens et ce païen était mort. Comme il n'y avait pas de juge (ὕπαρχος) dans cette ville, les maîtres de ce païen étaient venus et avaient arrêté les chrétiens, puis ils les avaient emprisonnés et ils les accusaient en disant : « Ceux-là ont donné du poison à ce païen et il est mort. » — Comme c'est la coutume des païens de laver les morts et d'enlever tous leurs viscères pour les embaumer et les parfumer d'aromates et de plantes odoriférantes, ils le laissèrent deux jours sans l'enterrer jusqu'à ce que le juge arrivât à cette ville. Saint Aaron entra dans la ville et,

(plein) d'un zèle divin, alla au théâtre. Le juge vint aussi au théâtre comme pour faire périr et faire tuer méchamment les chrétiens qui y étaient. Le saint demanda au juge et au peuple : « Qu'ont-ils fait de mal pour que vous vouliez les tuer? » Ils lui dirent : « C'est parce qu'ils ont avec perfidie fait mourir cet homme. » Il leur répondit : « Ils ne l'ont pas fait mourir, c'est la colère divine qui l'a frappé et il est mort. » Ils lui dirent : « La colère divine fait donc mourir les païens? » Le saint leur répondit : « Oui; eux et leurs dieux. » Or il y avait dans le théâtre une pierre (une statue) qui était très grande et dont le nom était Zeus; aussitôt que le saint eut prononcé le nom de Dieu, ce dieu des païens tomba et fut brisé. Les païens se jetèrent sur le saint, le saisirent, le frappèrent douloureusement et ils disaient : « Cet homme est un magicien. » * Puis ils prirent le saint et le conduisirent près des chrétiens pour les faire périr ensemble. Ces chrétiens se prosternèrent, le saluèrent et dirent : « Nous savons que tu es un serviteur de Dieu, mais montre à notre occasion la puissance de Dieu, car voilà que nous mourons sans avoir commis de faute. » Le saint leur répondit : « Que la volonté du Seigneur soit faite! » Puis le saint appela l'un des païens et lui dit : « Si je t'adjure par Dieu, tu ne m'écouteras pas; je t'adjure donc par ton dieu, montre-moi où est le mort. » Le païen dit : « Que veux-tu au mort? » Le saint dit : « Peut-être n'est-il pas mort. » (Le païen) se mit à rire de lui et dit : « Voilà deux jours qu'il est mort et toi tu dis qu'il n'est pas mort! » Tandis qu'ils parlaient ensemble, on apporta ce païen devant eux au milieu du théâtre pour l'ensevelir. Le païen lui dit : « Voilà ce mort dont tu dis qu'il n'est pas mort; ils veulent l'ensevelir. » Le saint courut près du lit de ce mort et il dit à ceux qui le portaient : « Je vous adjure par vos dieux de déposer ici le lit de ce mort. » Les païens lui obéirent; ils déposèrent le lit et ils dirent : « Que veut faire celui-là à ce mort? » Le saint s'agenouilla pour prier et dit : « Notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ qui as été crucifié par les Juifs à Jérusalem et qui as ressuscité le troisième jour, ressuscite ce païen, afin qu'on sache que tu es le vrai Dieu. » En entendant cela, les païens se mirent à rire de lui et dirent : « Au nom de celui qui a été crucifié, tu veux ressusciter un mort. » Lorsque le saint eut terminé sa prière, il s'approcha du mort et il lui dit : « Au nom de Notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ, je te le dis, lève-toi, et dis en vérité qui * t'a tué, afin que ces chrétiens qui ne sont pas coupables, ne meurent pas. » Et aussitôt le mort se leva. * fol. 92 V° a.

Le mort se mit à parler et il leur dit : « Malheur à vous, païens, qui ne connaissez pas Jésus, fils du Dieu vivant ; depuis deux jours que je suis mort, il m'a tourmenté fortement dans la géhenne à cause des œuvres païennes et surtout à cause des chrétiens qui ne méritent pas la mort, jusqu'à l'arrivée de ce saint homme qui m'a pris de (chez) son maître ; je lui ai promis que depuis le présent jour, je le confesserais et le servirais, et voilà que maintenant devant vous je le confesse avec son Père et son saint Esprit. » Alors tous les païens crièrent : « Nous croyons en toi, ô Dieu qui nous as envoyé ce saint homme pour nous ramener à la science et à la vraie foi. » Ils se précipitèrent tous ensemble et délivrèrent les chrétiens, puis tous vinrent en louant et en bénissant Dieu. Or il y avait une source dans le théâtre et le saint baptisa de ces païens, environ mille cinq cent cinquante âmes. Il demeura quelques jours avec eux, leur bâtit un autel et les associa au corps saint et au sang sanctifiant du Christ et tous également confessèrent le Père, le Fils et le saint Esprit.

19. Arrivée près de Mélitène. — Le saint souffrit à cause de son monastère désert et de ses disciples dispersés et, au milieu de la nuit, tandis qu'il se tenait en prières, * l'ange descendit du ciel et lui dit : « Salut, élu de Dieu, Mar Aaron; lève-toi et va en Arménie, car c'est là que tu dois terminer le cours de ta vie. » Au lever du soleil, le bienheureux pria, puis il prit son bâton et se mit en route. Il marcha durant de nombreux jours et arriva au grand fleuve l'Euphrate. Quand il eut passé ce fleuve, dans le voisinage de la ville le Mélitène, il monta sur une montagne élevée et resta en cet endroit (adonné) à de grands travaux (d'ascétisme). Dieu opéra par ses mains des prodiges et aussi des guérisons sur tous les malades et les affligés qui accouraient près de lui. * fol. 92 v° b.

difficulté du chemin. Le soir arriva et deux grands lions vinrent et s'arrêtèrent devant les pieds du saint. Il en fut effrayé; il pensa[1] que c'était une vision imaginaire et se signa du signe de la croix vivante, mais ils ne s'éloignèrent pas de lui. Alors le saint fut certain qu'ils étaient envoyés par Dieu. A ce moment une voix lui arriva du ciel qui disait : « Aaron, ne crains pas, mais lève-toi, repose-toi sur eux et monte au sommet de la montagne. » Il s'assit durant un mille sur chacun d'eux et monta sur la montagne. Quand il y arriva, (les lions) le laissèrent et s'en allèrent. Quand le soleil se leva, il vit la montagne cachée, paisible et tranquille; elle plut à ses yeux et il y demeura. Le saint parcourait cette montagne et ne mangeait rien autre que les racines qui y (poussaient). Il mangeait tous les dix jours et quelquefois tous les vingt jours. Il demeura là durant trois ans moins un mois. Sa renommée arriva aux pays d'alentour et on lui apportait tous les affligés et les hommes qui avaient tous les divers genres possibles de maladies. Il les guérissait tous au nom de Notre Seigneur.

homme de Mélitène, la ville bénie, lorsqu'il apprit qu'il n'y avait pas d'eau sur cette montagne Berikâ (bénie), prit une bête de somme de sa maison, vint près de saint Mar Aaron, fut béni par lui et lui dit : « Seigneur, j'ai appris que ceux qui viennent près de toi sur cette montagne sainte, souffrent beaucoup (du manque) d'eau; je t'en prie donc, seigneur, accepte cet âne pour qu'il serve à (porter) l'eau nécessaire à ceux qui viennent. » Le saint lui dit : « Mon fils, tu vois que nous n'avons même pas de place pour nous retirer, que sera-ce pour (loger) un âne! que mangera-t-il pour se rassasier? » Mais comme ce fidèle pressa beaucoup le saint, il (finit par) accepter l'âne. Il bénit ensuite ce fidèle, le combla de prières et de bénédictions et il retourna à sa ville. Le saint mit deux cruches sur l'âne et descendit au fleuve; il lui montra le chemin du fleuve durant deux jours et l'instruisit. Jamais plus le saint ne descendit avec lui, mais lorsque des malades et des affligés venaient près de lui, il prenait les cruches et les mettait sur l'âne et Dieu donnait à cet âne l'intelligence de descendre jusqu'au fleuve, de s'avancer au milieu de l'eau jusqu'à ce que l'eau passât par-dessus les cruches pour les remplir et de remonter près du saint. Tous ceux qui venaient près du saint voyaient (cela) et louaient Dieu.

Comme le temps passait et que l'âne ne revenait pas, le saint descendit et regarda vers le fleuve ; il vit l'ours dont la gueule était maculée du sang de l'âne. Le saint comprit qu'il avait mangé l'âne ; il l'interrogea et lui dit : « O méchant animal, où est l'âne ? » * fol. 93 r° b. Celui-ci * voulait fuir, mais le saint lui dit à nouveau : « Dis-moi en vérité si c'est toi qui as mangé l'âne. » Alors il inclina la tête, montrant ainsi qu'il l'avait mangé. Le saint lui dit : « Au nom de Notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ, viens près de moi. » Quand il fut près de lui, il prit quatre cruches, les mit sur lui et lui dit : « O malfaisant animal, cet âne devait vivre encore deux ans six mois et porter l'eau à cette montagne ; puisque tu l'as mangé, lorsque ce n'était pas son temps (de périr), tu apporteras l'eau à cette montagne pour faire boire les malades et les affligés. » L'ours obéit à l'ordre du saint et ceux qui le voyaient ainsi subjugué et accomplissant l'ordre du saint, étaient dans l'admiration et louaient Dieu qui soumet les animaux intelligents au pouvoir de ceux qui font sa volonté.

saint se fut répandue dans ce pays à cause des prodiges et des miracles qu'il faisait, le saint en fut affecté et ne voulut plus demeurer en cet endroit, car il fuyait la gloire des hommes. Il aimait la gloire (qui vient) de Dieu et non les louanges des hommes. C'est pour cela qu'il se résolut à partir en secret sans que personne sût où il allait. Tandis qu'il était dans ces pensées, un ange de Dieu descendit du ciel près de lui et lui dit : « Salut, élu de Dieu, Mar Aaron ; tu as pensé avec raison à ne plus habiter sur cette montagne, mais dans l'endroit qui te sera désigné. Tu as demeuré un certain temps ici, grâce aux prodiges que Dieu a faits par tes mains, pour que Dieu soit béni à cause de toi et pour que cette montagne, après avoir été bénie par tes saints pas, * devienne un lieu de refuge et de salut pour les âmes de tous ceux qui y affluent, y viennent, se réfugient dans tes saintes prières et ont souci du salut de leurs âmes. Mais maintenant, lève-toi et va d'ici où tu veux aller. » Le saint lui dit : « Seigneur, je ne sais pas où je dois aller. » L'ange lui dit : « Suis-moi. » Il descendit vers le grand fleuve Euphrate et tous deux marchèrent sur les eaux. L'ange le conduisit durant neuf heures, et, quand ils arrivèrent à la caverne, le saint vit une caverne où il n'y avait personne, et il entendit le bruit d'un grand tumulte. Le saint dit à l'ange : * fol. 93 v° a.

« Quel est le bruit de ce grand tumulte ? » L'ange lui dit : « Ce sont les démons que tu as chassés de la terre de Syrie, leur chef est celui qui était dans la maison de Gabriel. Ils sont au nombre de trois mille trente-neuf — un régiment et demi — que tu as chassés de tout le pays des Syriens. Maintenant, Dieu t'a donné pouvoir sur eux pour les chasser d'ici et les disperser. Cet endroit sera ta demeure ; et — après toi — il sera le refuge de ceux qui seront venus à toi et qui marcheront sur tes traces. Et le nom de ton maître sera loué à cause de toi en cet endroit jusqu'à la fin. »

24. Seconde expulsion des démons. Nouveau monastère. — L'ange monta ensuite au ciel et le saint demeura durant trois jours à l'entrée de cette caverne. Il trouva ensuite une petite grotte au sud de la caverne ; il y resta cinq mois et il y bâtit un autel. Chaque jour les démons le lapidaient pour l'obliger à quitter cette caverne. Le saint ne la quitta pas, mais Dieu lui donna pouvoir sur ces démons. Il sortit de sa caverne et éleva une croix. Il pria en cet endroit le premier jour et supplia Dieu qui lui donna la victoire.
fol. 93 vº b. Le second jour * il avança plus loin, il fit un oratoire et éleva une autre croix et les démons furent saisis de crainte. Le troisième jour il avança encore un peu et éleva une croix ; il pria et entra dans la caverne où étaient les démons, il les fit sortir et les chassa comme la paille devant le vent. Le saint les fit monter jusqu'à la montagne qui est au-dessus du monastère, et il éleva trois croix sur trois collines au nom du Père, du Fils et du saint Esprit. Il les arrêta par la vertu de la croix victorieuse et il leur dit : « Vous n'avez pas pouvoir de nuire en aucune manière aux hommes qui sont dans la limite de mon monastère, ni de nuit ni de jour. » Leur chef se retourna et dit au saint : « Tu nous as chassés de la Syrie et nous sommes venus demeurer dans cette caverne et voilà que maintenant tu nous chasses d'ici. Que viens-tu chercher sur cette terre ingrate et sans eau? Pour nous, (au contraire) Dieu nous a commandé de demeurer dans les terres ingrates et dans les lieux arides et sans habitation. » Le saint lui dit : « Tu ne peux plus demeurer dans le pays d'Arménie. » Le démon dit à l'illustre (saint) : « Puisque tu m'as chassé du pays de Syrie et que maintenant encore tu me chasses de l'Arménie, je vais te faire aller au pays de Beit Roumoiê (chez les Grecs). » Le saint chassa ainsi ce démon avec tous ses compagnons de ce pays et de toutes les cavernes qui s'y trouvaient et aucun ne fut vu depuis lors dans le monastère du saint et n'y sera vu jusqu'à la fin. Le saint aima cette caverne et y demeura, il progressait de jour en jour; cinquante

25. Le démon possède la fille de Constantin. — Le saint demeurait seul dans cette caverne, et ses disciples demeuraient dans une autre au-dessus de lui. Lorsque Dieu voulut faire briller la foi par le moyen du saint, il donna pouvoir à ce démon et il alla demeurer dans la fille du grand empereur Constantin. Il hurlait et disait : « Si Aaron de Saroug ne vient pas, je ne sors pas[1]. » Alors l'empereur envoya des lettres dans tous les pays, dans toutes les directions et en Syrie, mais on ne trouva pas le saint et l'empereur en conçut une grande peine. A cette époque la grâce divine amena à Constantinople des marchands de Mélitène et on renseigna l'empereur au sujet de ces marchands. L'empereur les fit donc venir et les questionna sur le saint. Ils racontèrent à l'empereur tous les prodiges que Dieu

1. Récit analogue sur saint Épiphane qui avait chassé un démon. Celui-ci, pour se venger, annonce à saint Épiphane qu'il l'obligera à se rendre en Perse. En effet il va posséder la fille du roi des Perses, lui fait connaître le nom et le pays de saint Épiphane, et le roi des Perses est obligé de le faire venir pour chasser ce démon. Cité dans le ms. Coislin 297, fol. 25ᵛ-26, — à noter que ce démon aurait aussi profité d'une absence de saint Épiphane pour venir — sous son apparence extérieure — diriger son monastère, Ibid., fol. 29.

opérait par l'entremise de son serviteur Mar Aaron. L'empereur se réjouit grandement et envoya trois messagers avec des chars rapides pour chercher le saint. Ils quittèrent la ville impériale et se mirent en route.

26. Aarón est mandé a Constantinople. — Avant leur arrivée, le saint projeta de bâtir un escalier de pierre dans cette caverne pour la commodité du peuple qui venait près de lui et qui montait et descendait. Le saint trouva une grande pierre et voulut la rouler, mais il ne le put. Un ange de Dieu descendit du ciel près de lui et prit la pierre d'un côté pendant que le saint la prenait de l'autre et ils mirent cette pierre à la base de l'escalier. Tandis qu'ils disposaient cette pierre, les messagers de l'empereur arrivèrent * à l'entrée de la caverne, virent le saint et l'ange avec lui; ils pensèrent que cet homme était un ange parce qu'il (l'ange) était revêtu d'un habit blanc comme la neige, tandis que le saint portait un vêtement de poils. (Ensuite) l'ange monta au ciel. Ces hommes, saisis de crainte, tombèrent à terre. Lorsque le saint vit qu'ils tombaient, il monta près d'eux, les releva et leur dit : « Que voulez-vous et d'où venez-vous? » Ils lui dirent : « Es-tu Aaron de Saroug? » Il leur répondit : « Oui, je le suis. » Ils lui dirent : * fol. 94 r° b.

Le saint les renvoya et leur dit : « Retournez en paix près de l'empereur et dites-lui : Cela vient de Dieu. » Ils lui dirent : « Viens, monte sur les bêtes de somme pour partir en hâte. » Le saint leur dit : « Je serai là-bas avant vous, partez. » Les messagers le pressèrent d'aller avec eux et il ne voulut pas; ils s'en allèrent pleins de joie pour s'en retourner en hâte et annoncer à l'empereur qu'ils avaient trouvé le saint Mar Aaron.

Son départ. — Alors le saint partit pour aller à Constantinople, le jour de la sainte fête de l'adoration de la croix salvatrice le quatorze du mois d'Elul (14 Septembre), le mercredi, après avoir communié et avoir célébré la fête avec tous ses offices. Il réunit tous ses disciples, pria devant Dieu et leur fit couler un peu d'eau de cette caverne. Le saint dit à ses disciples : « Priez pour moi. » Ils crurent qu'il partait pour ne plus revenir. Le Alors des étincelles de feu sortirent du saint et les frappèrent aux yeux, la lumière fut refusée à leurs prunelles et ils ne virent plus pour se conduire. Alors tous crièrent à haute voix avec larmes et dirent : « Aie pitié de nous, serviteur du Dieu vivant, et demande à ton maître de nous rendre la lumière qui a été enlevée à nos yeux; nous te promettons et nous te jurons de ne plus nous adonner au vol et de ne plus retomber dans les œuvres de Satan, mais de nous convertir et de nous attacher aux commandements de Dieu qui sont la vie des hommes. » Quand le saint vit leurs larmes et remarqua leur pénitence, il fut saisi de douleur à leur sujet et leur dit : « Si vous vous convertissez à Dieu de tout votre cœur, vos yeux s'ouvriront. » Ceux-ci lui dirent : « Nous savons, seigneur, que le Christ ton maître t'exauce lorsque tu lui demandes quelque chose; montre donc sur nous la d'hommes venaient à lui de partout pour qu'il leur révélât les choses au sujet desquelles ils l'interrogeaient. Lorsque Satan, qui se trouvait dans Lebânâ et trompait les hommes par ses divinations, s'aperçut de l'arrivée du saint, cet esprit (impur) cria et dit : « Qu'ai-je à faire avec toi, Aaron le Syrien, qui es venu aujourd'hui pour me chasser de ce pays où j'habite depuis vingt ans, — tous regardaient Lebânâ comme un prophète et l'interrogeaient (pour apprendre) de sa bouche les choses cachées, — et voilà qu'aujourd'hui tu veux me dévoiler. » Lorsque Étienne entendit ce que disait l'esprit de ce démon qui habitait dans son fils, cela déplut à ses yeux; il fut saisi d'une violente colère contre le saint et il dit : « Il te suffisait de tout le pays de Syrie pour faire ce que tu voulais, * et voilà que maintenant tu viens contre mon fils et tu veux le priver de son pouvoir, si tu le peux. Mais cela ne dépend pas de toi, car son pouvoir est plus grand que le tien. » Alors saint Mar Aaron interrogea Étienne et lui dit tranquillement : « Dis-moi, d'où ce pouvoir de révéler les choses cachées a-t-il été donné à ton fils? » Étienne lui dit : « Il lui a été donné par Dieu. » Lorsque le saint entendit qu'il blasphémait Dieu, il s'irrita contre Étienne fol. 95 r° a.

et le maudit; et le démon entra et demeura en lui et son fils fut jeté à terre aux pieds du saint. (Le saint) commanda à cet esprit de divination qui habitait en lui et il s'en alla, et depuis cette heure il ne fit plus de divination. Alors tous ceux qui avaient vu et entendu tout ce qui s'était passé comprirent que cela provenait de l'esprit du démon qui habitait en lui et non d'une prophétie (provenant) de Dieu et ils connurent que ce qu'ils tenaient comme (venant) d'un prophète, provenait du tentateur. Ils connurent encore qu'il était un prophète menteur et un apôtre de tromperie et que ce démon ne pouvait pas résister à la puissance divine. Sa fraude fut révélée à tous par l'ordre de l'élu Mar Aaron. Ce démon affligea Étienne, au point qu'il était comme mort, et le saint Mar Aaron quitta cet endroit. Les hommes qui étaient là crurent qu'Étienne était mort et ils furent tous saisis d'admiration et d'étonnement au sujet de ce qu'ils avaient vu.

de prier sur lui et de chasser complètement ce démon (qui habitait) en lui. Le saint, voyant leur foi, eut pitié d'eux; il s'approcha et l'oignit d'huile au nom de Notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ. Aussitôt le démon le quitta, il fut guéri, son intelligence lui revint, et il alla se jeter aux pieds du saint qu'il embrassa en le priant de lui pardonner sa folie. Le saint pria sur lui, appela ces fidèles qui l'avaient apporté près de lui et le leur rendit sain et sauf. Ils retournèrent à leur village en louant Dieu de ce qu'ils avaient vu et des nombreux prodiges que Dieu opéra par les mains de saint Mar Aaron pour la gloire de son nom et qui ne sont pas écrits dans ce livre.

mée Iconium et, comme ils arrivaient à la porte de la ville, ils trouvèrent un mort qu'on allait enterrer. Les seigneurs de cette ville étaient chrétiens. Lorsqu'ils virent le saint et l'habit (τάξις) pur, (vénéré) de son monachisme, les maîtres de ce mort vinrent et le prièrent pour qu'il s'associât à cet enterrement, et ils lui disaient : « Seigneur, cet enfant avait sept ans, il jouait sur le mur de la ville, il en tomba et mourut. » Le saint alla avec eux et quand ils eurent fini l'office, tout le peuple le conduisit au tombeau. Ils dirent au saint : « Prends de l'huile et signe le mort » — selon la coutume qu'ils avaient de faire pour les corps des morts. — Le saint ne le voulut pas. Comme les prêtres le pressaient, il leur obéit enfin. Il prit de l'huile et la jeta sur le corps du mort et aussitôt cet enfant se leva et il vécut de nombreuses années. faut prendre de la nourriture et ensuite nous nous mettrons en mer. » Le saint lui dit : « Va, mon fils, à la ville, et apporte ce que tu veux. » Il entra dans la ville, la parcourut, retourna près du saint et lui dit : « Seigneur, je n'ai rien trouvé, si ce n'est des têtes (d'animaux) seulement. » Le saint lui dit : « Va, mon fils, apporte-(m')en. » En allant à la ville, le frère ne savait que penser du saint. Celui-ci entra dans la ville avec lui et trouva un homme qui avait de la viande; le saint prit de lui une tête de brebis. Ce marchand (κάπηλος) dit au saint Mar Aaron : « Comment as-tu l'extérieur d'un moine et manges-tu de la viande; car dans ce pays les moines ne mangent pas de viande! » Le bienheureux lui dit : « Que dis-tu là! Tu viens de nous donner des légumes. » Saint Mar Aaron bénit cette tête (de brebis) et elle devint des légumes cuits, c'est-à-dire du chou (κράμβη). Le saint en mangea et commanda à son disciple qui était avec lui d'en manger et il ne voulut pas. A cette vue, ceux qui étaient près du saint furent saisis d'une grande admiration et le saint se dirigea de là vers le rivage de la mer. Il s'y mit à genoux, en prières devant Dieu pour qu'il dirigeât sa route. Quand il eut fini sa prière, il se leva, jeta son manteau sur la mer et monta dessus[1].

Alors le démon qui était dans la fille de l'empereur Constantin se mit à parler et à dire : « Aaron le Syrien est venu, il est arrivé ici. » Alors l'empereur envoya un navire du côté par où étaient partis les messagers qu'il avait envoyés auparavant à sa recherche. Le saint entra dans la ville le jour du dimanche, et il alla se reposer près d'un solitaire qui demeurait dans cette ville.

38. Ce démon se lamentait et disait : « Le saint est entré dans la ville. » L'empereur envoya des messagers et ils cherchèrent le saint jusqu'à ce qu'ils l'eussent trouvé. Le bienheureux était en prières; quand il eut fini, il parla à ces hommes qui étaient venus près de lui et il leur dit : « Qui cherchez-vous? » Ils lui dirent : « D'où viens-tu? » Le saint leur répondit : « Je suis un étranger. » Ils lui dirent : « L'empereur nous a envoyés te chercher. » Ils emmenèrent le saint et partirent. Au même moment vinrent les messagers que l'empereur avait envoyés jadis à sa recherche jusqu'en Arménie; ils entrèrent chez l'empereur et lui racontèrent tout ce qui avait eu lieu. Ces messagers virent le saint et furent dans l'admiration. * Ils dirent à l'empereur : « Nous avons laissé cet homme après nous, et nous voyons qu'il nous a précédés ici. » Et ils racontèrent à l'empereur au sujet de l'ange qu'ils avaient vu près du saint et l'empereur se réjouit d'une grande joie.

39. Nouvelle expulsion du démon. — L'empereur ordonna alors de lui apporter la jeune fille qui était possédée du démon; elle criait et elle écumait. Ils la jetèrent aux pieds du saint. Quand il la vit, il pleura, il pria devant le Seigneur et il dit : « Seigneur, pour que le peuple voie et croie que tu es le vrai Dieu, que tu exauces ceux qui font ta volonté et t'invoquent avec une vraie foi et que tu glorifies ceux qui te glorifient, ordonne, Seigneur, que ce mauvais démon sorte de l'oreille de cette jeune fille. » Aussitôt l'oreille de la jeune fille s'ouvrit et ce démon en sortit. Mar Aaron ordonna à ce mauvais démon de ne plus rentrer chez personne à jamais. L'empereur Constantin, la reine et tous les grands se prosternèrent aux pieds du saint et l'empereur lui demanda de rester près de lui, mais il ne le voulut pas. Le saint demanda à l'empereur de bâtir un temple à cet endroit; et ils le bâtirent comme le demandait le bienheureux, à l'orient de la ville sur le bord de la mer. (Aaron) demeura là des jours nombreux et l'empereur lui fit de grands cadeaux : de l'or et de l'argent pour son monastère. Il ne voulut rien recevoir de lui, sinon une petite tunique pour (servir) l'autel, et l'illustre (saint) demanda à l'empereur de le renvoyer à son monastère. Alors l'empereur dit au bienheureux : « Pourquoi ne prends-tu rien de ce que je te donne? » Le saint lui répondit : « Si tu veux ainsi me donner un présent, que ta Majesté ordonne que l'on conduise un petit courant d'eau à l'endroit où j'habite; bâtis-moi un temple et cette échelle de pierre dans la caverne et ta mémoire (vivra) dans les générations à venir. » L'empereur donna avec grand plaisir beaucoup d'or et d'argent * à des ouvriers habiles et il or- * fol. 96 v° a.

donna instamment aux gouverneurs du pays où habitait le bienheureux d'aider les ouvriers. Ils bâtirent un temple remarquable dans le monastère du saint, ainsi que cet escalier (qui s'y trouve), et ils firent des conduites (ἀγωγός) d'eau, comme le voulait le saint, jusqu'à l'entrée de la caverne.

40. Départ de Constantinople. — Le saint pria de nouveau pour l'empereur et pour la ville, puis il se mit en route pour retourner à son monastère. Quand il arriva à la porte de la ville, l'Ennemi du genre humain essaya s'il ne pourrait pas détourner le saint de la route qu'il avait entreprise. Il apparut sous la forme d'un moine, parla avec saint Mar Aaron et lui dit : « Si tu le veux, je demande à être ton disciple. » Quand le bienheureux le vit, il comprit que c'était l'ennemi du genre humain ; il lui répondit ainsi et lui dit : « Comment veux-tu rester avec moi comme disciple, lorsque je suis un homme infirme et que le monastère des frères est très éloigné ! » Alors Satan dans sa ruse répondit et dit au saint : « C'est pour cela que je désire aller avec toi, parce que tu es un homme infirme, je veux te servir. » Le saint ne put se débarrasser de lui, alors il se demanda comment il pourrait abattre la force de cet ennemi de notre race. Le saint prit la parole et lui dit : « L'empereur m'a donné beaucoup d'or et d'argent, mais je n'ai rien voulu accepter de lui parce que je ne pouvais pas le porter ; si tu avais été avec moi auparavant, j'aurais pu accepter tout ce que me donnait l'empereur. » Le démon dit au saint : « Retournons et acceptons tout ce que l'empereur voudra donner. » Alors le saint retourna à la ville. Le démon pensa qu'il allait prendre de l'or et de l'argent, qu'il le porterait et qu'il se mettrait en route et — quand on serait un peu plus loin — qu'il le jetterait, s'enfuirait et tromperait (ainsi) le saint.

Le démon porte une auge. — * Le bienheureux, lorsqu'il était entré auparavant dans le palais de l'empereur, y avait vu une pierre d'aimant creuse, dans laquelle les mulets de l'empereur buvaient l'eau ; le saint avait été frappé de sa grandeur et elle était très belle. Le saint songea à s'en servir pour abattre la force du perfide. Lorsque l'empereur était à la porte du palais, il pensa qu'il revenait pour lui demander quelque présent. L'empereur et ses grands sortirent, saluèrent le saint et tous — mais surtout l'empereur — lui dirent : « Tout ce que tu veux demander, demande-le, jusqu'à la moitié de l'empire. » Le saint lui répondit : « Je ne te demande que cette pierre. » L'empereur lui dit : « Retourne en paix à ton monastère, j'attèlerai (à cette pierre) des taureaux et des bêtes de somme, et je te l'enverrai à ton monas- * fol. 96 v° b.

six coudées de long et trente-trois de large. Il dit au démon : « Descends maintenant mesurer la terre qui a été ouverte. » Le démon descendit la mesurer et le saint retourna cette pierre sur le démon. Le bienheureux prit la parole et dit au démon : « Causeras-tu encore de la peine et de la fatigue à Aaron dans les (divers) pays, ô mauvais démon, et diras-tu encore : Si Aaron de Saroug ne vient pas, je ne sors pas? Je t'adjure par le Dieu vivant de ne pas quitter cette pierre avant que je revienne près de toi. » Le saint s'en alla et le laissa jusqu'aujourd'hui. Ce démon dit à ceux qui vont et viennent : « Est-ce que Aaron de Saroug ne revient pas? » — * Ils lui disent : « Non, » et il se lamente en lui-même pour avoir voulu tromper le saint et il reste sous la pierre jusqu'aujourd'hui. * fol. 97 v° a.

43. Guérisons. — Le saint, partant de là, arriva à la ville nommée Tarendâ. Il y avait là un homme qui avait été piqué par un serpent et n'était pas encore guéri. Quand le saint le vit, il en eut pitié; il l'oignit de l'eulogie et il fut guéri. Le bienheureux lui dit : « En quel endroit demeure ce mauvais serpent? » Cet homme piqué (par le serpent) alla lui montrer l'endroit. Lorsque le bienheureux vit le serpent, celui-ci s'élança aussitôt sur le bien-

44. Le saint partit de là et entra dans la ville nommée Mélitène; il y trouva un homme qui avait une femme muette depuis sa naissance. Le bienheureux entra à l'église au moment du soir, et cet homme, lorsqu'il le vit, lui dit : « Seigneur, je vois que tu es un serviteur du Dieu vivant : j'ai une sœur qui n'a pas parlé depuis le ventre de sa mère. » Saint Mar Aaron lui dit : « Amène-la ici. » Quand il l'eut amenée, le saint lui mit l'eulogie dans la bouche; aussitôt elle parla et, dès le matin, il la laissa. Quand on la vit parler, on courut près d'elle et on lui dit : « Comment parles-tu? » Cette femme leur dit : « Il y a un homme dans la maison qui m'a fait parler. » Ils coururent près de lui, se jetèrent à ses pieds et le prièrent de demeurer près d'eux, mais il ne le voulut pas.

45. Beaucoup de gens se réunirent près de lui; le bienheureux pria sur eux, puis se mit en route et entra dans un village nommé Aïloun. Il y trouva un homme nommé Abraham — il y avait là de grands travaux comme s'ils avaient été faits par les démons. — Comme les maîtres de ce village sortaient le dimanche pour prier, et Abraham était avec eux, ils virent le saint Mar Aaron et lui demandèrent de prier * sur eux et d'entrer dans leur village parce qu'il y avait dans ce pays beaucoup de démons qui tourmentaient les hommes. Il entra dans ce village et ils lui amenèrent environ trente hommes qui avaient des démons. Ils demandèrent à l'illustre Mar Aaron de chasser les démons de ces hommes. Le saint leur demanda de sortir pour la prière et quand ils eurent fait comme il le leur avait ordonné, le bienheureux pria sur eux et ils furent guéris. Le saint leur dit de faire des oblations et le saint offrit l'oblation (le saint sacrifice) au nom du Seigneur, et les démons s'enfuirent de cet endroit et de tous ces hommes. Ceux qui virent le prodige qu'il opéra chez eux louèrent Dieu qui a donné un tel pouvoir aux hommes. Les seigneurs de ce village proposaient au saint de demeurer près d'eux, mais le saint Mar Aaron leur répondit : « J'ai des frères qui m'attendent dans le monastère et je ne puis pas demeurer près de vous, mais priez pour moi afin que j'arrive près d'eux en paix, car voilà longtemps que je suis séparé d'eux. » Ils lui dirent : « Seigneur, nous irons les chercher et nous les amènerons. » Mais le saint ne le voulut pas et ils firent un oratoire de l'endroit où il avait offert le (saint) sacrifice.

44. Retour au monastère. — Le saint partit de là et arriva près des frères et il trouva que cette caverne qui leur fournissait l'eau était desséchée. C'est cette eau qu'il leur avait fait sortir par sa prière avant d'aller à la ville impériale. Il quitta le monastère, marcha l'espace de trois milles et trouva de l'eau qu'il conduisit à l'aide de son bâton jusqu'à l'entrée de la caverne près de ses disciples. Il descendit près d'eux et ils virent que cet endroit de la caverne laissait couler de l'eau. Ils louèrent Dieu et lui dirent : « Seigneur, le jour où tu as quitté le monastère, l'eau a séché dans la caverne et maintenant que tu es revenu, la voilà qui coule. » Ils se réjouissaient à cause du saint et exultaient plus que pour une perle de grand prix. * Le saint leur dit : « Enfants, voyez combien Dieu aime ceux qui l'invoquent en justice et en vérité. »

Ils tracèrent aussi une conduite d'eau jusqu'au monastère, comme le saint l'avait demandé et comme l'empereur victorieux et fidèle l'avait commandé. Le saint demeura dans cette caverne durant de longues années et chaque jour il augmentait ses œuvres angéliques. Il progressait de jour en jour dans toutes les vertus et (multipliait) les prodiges

Dieu leur donnait la guérison à tous par les prières de saint Mar Aaron, et ils partaient pleins de joie et louaient Dieu qui donne une telle grâce et une telle vertu à ceux qui font sa volonté et qui observent ses commandements.

46. Mort d'Aaron. — Quand il eut vieilli et fut rassasié de bons jours, le jour de la mort du saint approcha et arriva. Il convoqua et réunit tous les frères et il leur dit : « Mes enfants, voilà que je quitte cette vie pour aller près du Christ; pour vous, voyez à vous conduire avec grande piété, comme il convient à votre saint habit (σχῆμα). Ayez les uns pour les autres des sentiments pacifiques et affectueux. Vous aurez Thomas pour chef, pour supérieur et pour conseiller. « Les frères étaient au nombre de soixante-dix-neuf et Thomas était un homme divin et parfait, le confident du saint.

47. Saint Mar Aaron portait sur ses reins à l'intérieur une ceinture de fer et sur son corps un habit de poils. Il se mit à genoux en prières, il pria sur tout le pays et sur ses habitants et il dit : « Seigneur Dieu, reçois mon esprit dans la pureté et dans la sainteté, et garde tes promesses envers moi.

LA LÉGENDE DE MAXIME ET DOMÈCE

INTRODUCTION

La source de cette légende est un récit de Macaire, raconté par Vitimios. Le texte grec se trouve avec traduction latine dans Migne, P. G., t. LXV, col. 273-278; t. XXXIV, col. 253-257; et l'ancienne traduction latine figure dans les Vitae Patrum, en particulier dans Migne, P. L., t. LXXIII, col. 802-803 et 1004-1006. Voici le récit de Macaire :

Un jour que j'étais à Scété, deux étrangers y vinrent, l'un portait la barbe et l'autre en avait à peine un commencement[1]. Ils vinrent me dire : « Où est la cellule de l'abbé Macaire? » Je leur dis : « Que lui voulez-vous? » Ils répondirent : « Nous avons entendu parler de lui et de Scété et nous venons le voir. » Je leur dis : « C'est moi. » Ils me saluèrent[2] et dirent : « Nous voulons demeurer ici. » Comme je les vis délicats, et qu'ils semblaient avoir été élevés dans les richesses, je leur dis : « Vous ne pouvez demeurer ici. » Le plus grand dit : « Si nous ne pouvons pas demeurer ici, allons ailleurs. » Je me dis en moi-même : « Pourquoi les chasser et les scandaliser, la peine les fera fuir d'eux-mêmes »; et je leur dis : « restez, faites-vous une cellule si vous le pouvez. » Ils me dirent : « Indique-nous un endroit et nous le ferons. » — Le vieillard leur donna une hache, une besace pleine de pain et de sel, il leur montra une pierre dure et il leur dit : « Creusez ici, apportez ensuite du bois du marais, couvrez (la cellule) et demeurez. » Je pensais, disait-il, qu'ils s'en iraient à cause de la fatigue. — Ils me demandèrent : « A quoi travaillerons-nous ici? » Je leur répondis : « Aux joncs. » Je pris ensuite des joncs du marais et je leur montrai à commencer les cordes et comment il fallait tresser, puis je leur dis : « Faites des corbeilles et donnez-les aux gardiens et ils vous porteront du pain. » Ensuite je les quittai.

Ils firent avec patience tout ce que je leur avais dit et je ne les revis plus de trois ans. J'étais anxieux à leur sujet et je me disais : « Que peuvent-ils bien faire? puisqu'ils ne viennent rien me demander. D'autres viennent de très loin près de moi et ceux-là qui sont tout près ne viennent pas. » Ils n'allaient pas non plus près des autres, si ce n'est à l'église, en silence, pour recevoir la communion. Je priai Dieu en jeûnant une semaine pour qu'il me montrât leurs œuvres. Après cette semaine, j'allai près d'eux voir comment ils étaient installés. Lorsque je frappai, ils m'ouvrirent; ils me saluèrent sans parler et, après avoir fait une prière, je m'assis. Le grand fit signe au plus petit de sortir et il s'assit pour tresser le jonc sans parler. A la neuvième heure, il frappa; le plus jeune vint, fit un peu de bouillie et prépara la table sur un signe du plus grand. Il y plaça trois portions (παξαμάδας) et s'assit en silence. Je dis : « Levez-vous, mangeons. » Nous nous levâmes, nous mangeâmes; (le plus jeune) apporta un verre et nous bûmes. Lorsque le soir vint, ils me dirent : « Pars-tu? » Je répondis : « Non, je coucherai ici. » Ils me mirent une natte d'un côté et, pour eux, (une autre) dans l'angle de l'autre côté ; ils enlevèrent leurs ceintures et leurs manteaux (ἀναλάβους) et se couchèrent sur la natte devant moi. Lorsqu'ils se couchèrent, je priai Dieu de me révéler leurs œuvres. Et le toit s'ouvrit et il vint une lumière comme de jour ; mais eux ne voyaient pas cette lumière. Lorsqu'ils pensèrent que je dormais, le grand piqua le plus jeune au côté et ils se levèrent, prirent leurs ceintures et levèrent les mains au ciel. Je les voyais, mais eux ne me voyaient pas. Je vis les démons qui venaient comme des mouches sur le plus jeune ; les uns allaient se poser sur sa bouche et d'autres sur ses yeux. Et je vis un ange du Seigneur tenant une épée de feu, qui le protégeait et chassait les démons loin de lui. Ils ne pouvaient pas approcher du plus grand. Lorsque, sur le matin, ils se reposèrent, je fis comme si je m'éveillais et ils en firent autant. Le grand ne me dit que ceci : « Veux-tu que nous récitions douze psaumes? » Je répondis : « Oui. » Le plus jeune récita cinq psaumes par six stiches (versets) avec un Alleluia. A chaque verset, une lampe de feu sortait de sa bouche et montait au ciel. Le grand aussi, lorsqu'il ouvrait la bouche pour psalmodier, il sortait comme un câble de feu qui allait jusqu'au ciel. Moi aussi, je récitai un peu de mémoire, puis je partis en disant : « Priez pour moi. » Pour eux, ils me saluèrent en silence. J'appris donc que le plus grand était parfait, mais que l'Ennemi tourmentait encore le plus petit. Quelques jours après, le plus grand frère mourut, et trois jours après, le plus petit. — Et lorsque quelques-uns des Pères venaient près d'Abba Macaire, il les conduisait à la cellule (des deux défunts) et disait : « Venez voir le martyrium[1] des petits étrangers. »

Ce récit eut grand succès puisqu'il figure déjà dans les collections de Vitae Patrum, attribuées à Rufin et à Jean le sous-diacre. Une église (le martyrium de la fin du récit précédent), et même un monastère[2], furent mis sous le vocable de ces étrangers — de ces Romains — et il est assez naturel qu'un auteur assez tardif — qui a usurpé le nom de Bisoès (Peschoi) — ait voulu percer le mystère qui entourait leur vie et nous raconter leur naissance et leurs miracles antérieurs à leur arrivée à Scété.

Nous reproduisons ci-dessous la rédaction du manuscrit 234. Celle-ci ne leur prête aucun miracle, car, dit-elle, « qui pourrait les raconter »? Nous ajouterons quelques notes pour signaler les nombreuses additions de la rédaction développée, dont la version copte a été publiée par M. Amélineau (Annales du musée Guimet, t. XXV), et dont la version syriaque existe dans de nombreux manuscrits ; les plus anciens sont du XIe siècle[3]. Nous avons étudié le ms. syriaque 236 de Paris qui représente en général la même source que le copte. Il ajoute cependant trois anecdotes que nous reproduisons en appendice pour compléter la version copte.

HISTOIRE DES SAINTS ROMAINS (ROMAOS)[1]

FILS DE VALENTINIEN (VALENTIOS) : MAXIME ET DOMÈCE (DOMATRIOS)[2]

1. Leur naissance. — Au temps de l'empereur Valentinien[3] (Vâlensṭîôs), fils du pieux empereur Jovien (Jôbînîanôs), Valentinien (Valenṭîôs) avait deux fils : Maxime et Domèce (Dômétrîôs), et une fille ; leur père les élevait en toute piété et pureté et dans une étude assidue des saints Livres. Alors ils complotèrent ensemble et dirent : « Comment pourrions-nous * fuir ce monde et devenir moines? » — Ils se dirent : « Nous dirons à notre père que nous voulons aller à la ville de Nicée et prier dans le temple des trois cent dix-huit saints Pères ; ensuite, nous irons où Dieu voudra. » * fol. 80 v.

2. Voici le titre du copte publié d'après le ms. 67 du Vatican : « La vie des saints grecs (ⲛⲣⲱⲙⲁⲓⲟⲥ) Maxime et Domèce (ⲇⲟⲙⲉⲧⲓⲟⲥ), les fils de Valentin (ⲛⲟⲩⲁⲗⲉⲛⲧⲓⲛⲟⲥ) le roi des Grecs... l'un d'eux, à savoir Maxime, se reposa le quatorzième jour du mois de Tobi, et l'autre, à savoir Domèce, le dix-septième jour du même mois; elle a été racontée par Peschoi (ⲡϣⲟⲓ), l'homme de Constantinople et l'archidiacre qui habita Schiît (ϣⲓⲏⲧ) près d'Abba Macaire, l'homme de Dieu, et d'Abba Isidore qui se reposa étant diacre, et l'on mit à sa place Moïse le Nègre. Et Abba Peschoi a écrit la vie de ces deux saints pour en faire souvenir ; il l'a placée dans l'Église pour le profit de quiconque veut vivre selon Dieu. » Annales du Musée Guimet, XXV, 262.

2. Vocation monacale. — Quand ils furent allés à Nicée et eurent été bénis par ces (saints) Pères, ils partirent de là et allèrent au pays de Palestine, près du père Agabus[1] le solitaire, qui était de Tarse de Cilicie et demeurait sur cette montagne qui est près de la mer. Lorsque saint Agabus les vit, il les reçut avec joie; ils lui révélèrent leurs pensées et, lorsqu'il vit leur amour pour Dieu, il leur donna aussitôt l'habit monacal et ils demeurèrent près de lui.

3. Au bout de trois ans, au moment où il allait mourir, le père Agabus leur dit : « O mes enfants, le père Macaire (Mâcârîs) le grand est venu cette nuit près de moi et m'a dit : Cette nuit tu quitteras cette vie, mais commande à tes enfants de venir près de moi au désert d'Égypte parce que Dieu les appelle à être mes fils. — En vérité je vous le dis, ô mes enfants, si l'empereur votre père apprend que vous êtes ici, il vous fera aussitôt rechercher, mais, après ma mort, levez-vous, allez en Égypte près du père Macaire (Maqârîs),

1. D'après le copte, c'est un moine de Nicée, nommé Jean, qui les envoie en Syrie près d'Agabus.

* fol. 81 r. 4. Séjour en Syrie. — Maintenant, parlons ici * de Théodose : Ce Théodose était d'une famille égyptienne; il monta à Constantinople parce qu'il avait grande force corporelle et grande science, et il craignait Dieu. On parla de lui à l'empereur Valentinien (Vâlentînôs) et il le fit chef des écuries (stabula), et il le chargea de gouverner tous les endroits où il y avait des chevaux appartenant à l'empereur. Quand approcha la mort de l'empereur Valentinien (Vâlentiôs), il souffrait en lui-même de ce que ce ne seraient pas ses enfants qui recevraient son pouvoir impérial après lui; et il ne savait pas ce qu'ils étaient devenus et il n'y avait personne pour régner après lui. (Il souffrait surtout) de ce qu'il y avait un homme de la race de Julien l'impie qui attendait d'être empereur. Dieu inspira au roi d'appeler Théodose, chef des étables (stabula), et de lui donner en mariage sa fille, sœur de Maxime et de Domèce (Démétrîs), car il savait qu'il était sage et saint, et il le prit pour son successeur sur le siège impérial.

1. Le copte a tenté de les compter. L'auteur a l'impudence de se donner pour un témoin oculaire, p. 270 sqq. : « Venez donc que je vous apprenne les signes et les merveilles et les grâces de guérison que Dieu opéra par eux dans les malades, au nom de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ. » Ils guérissent un homme d'Ascalon « qui avait un esprit divinateur ». Ils ordonnent à un dragon des environs d'Iconium de ne plus nuire à personne. Ils guérissent un lépreux de Lystra et un homme dont le visage était tourné en arrière. « Je vous en prie, que personne ne soit incroyant aux choses que je dis, car moi aussi, le minime Peschoi, comme j'étais encore à Constantinople, avant même de savoir où se trouvait Schiît, j'appris par des marchands les guérisons que ces saints opéraient au nom de Notre-Seigneur Jésus le Christ, Dieu le Verbe, et je me rendis en Syrie, étant encore laïque, afin de voir par mes yeux ce que j'avais entendu, afin que mon cœur fût persuadé. » Un prêtre de Gabala, nommé Zacharie, avait « un esprit archontique ». Maxime lui ordonne d'obéir à son évêque. Vient alors l'histoire particulière au syriaque (fol. 61-62) que nous éditons plus loin, ils guérissent un prêtre de Séleucie d'Isaurie. Deux philosophes d'Athènes, pour éprouver les saints, feignent d'être manchots et aveugles; ils le deviennent en réalité, les saints les envoient au topos de saint Léonce (de Tripoli ?) pour se laver dans son puits.

Lorsque le vieillard qui servait les saints se rendait à Scété, son chameau tomba et se brisa les deux pieds, les saints le guérirent; ils guérissent aussi le vieillard à qui un soldat avait crevé un œil. Viennent ensuite les deux prodiges sur les animaux, conservés seulement dans le syriaque.

5. Peu de temps après, l'empereur Théodose et la reine, sœur de ces saints frères, entendirent leur renommée. La reine avec sa mère — qui était aussi la mère de ces saints — se mirent en route et vinrent près d'eux avec leurs habits (τάξις) impériaux. Lorsque les saints apprirent leur arrivée, ils allèrent au-devant d'elles, et lorsque les reines virent le changement de leur beauté (qu'ils avaient eue dans le palais) impérial, de douleur, elles tombèrent à terre comme mortes. Les bienheureux firent sur elles le signe de la sainte croix et elles se réveillèrent comme d'un sommeil; elles se levèrent * avec crainte et avec de nombreuses larmes; elles embrassèrent les pieds des saints, demeurèrent près d'eux pendant quelques jours et retournèrent à la ville impériale. * fol. 81 v.

Lorsque l'empereur les vit, il courba la tête et les salua ; il fut béni par eux et il leur dit : « Vous êtes mes pères et c'est à vous qu'appartient l'empire; parce que vous avez méprisé cet empire transitoire, Dieu vous en donne deux : en ce monde et dans l'autre. Bienheureux êtes-vous! Bienheureux êtes-vous! » Ils le bénirent et lui enseignèrent beaucoup de choses et Dieu lui donna, de leur sœur, deux fils : Arcadius — d'un nom égyptien qui signifie « fils des travailleurs »[1] — et Honorius (Anôrîs), du nom grec Honorios. Il les éleva en toute piété et leur enseigna les écritures de Byzance et aussi de Rome la grande. Leur maître fut le père Arsène, avant qu'il ne s'enfuît de la cour impériale au désert et ne devînt un vase d'élection. Arcadius devint diacre et ensuite empereur de Constantinople, et Honorius fut empereur à Rome. Honorius était saint; il cherchait à imiter les actions de ces saints fils d'empereur et il se gardait sans tache en toute perfection; il ne mangeait pas un seul gâteau (κολλύρα) (aux frais) du trésor impérial, mais durant la nuit il faisait lui-même des corbeilles (σπυρίδες) et pourvoyait ainsi à ses besoins; il donnait le super-

Et tout cela, il ne le montra à personne, si ce n'est à un serviteur qui le servait, et il passa ainsi tous les jours de sa vie à imiter les (belles) actions des saints. milieu des roches de montagnes abruptes ; aussi, ils prièrent Dieu de les aider et Dieu leur envoya un ange qui les emporta et les laissa sur la montagne d'Abba Macaire. Quand Macaire les vit, il les reçut avec grande joie et bonté et ils lui dirent : « Nous sommes venus, seigneur, pour demeurer près de ta Sainteté. » Il leur montra un endroit où ils demeureraient, leur donna des (outils) en fer et ils creusèrent la montagne et se firent une cellule. Il leur

Le père Macaire (Màqarì) ne leur montra pas qu'il savait qui ils étaient, car il connaissait tout par le saint Esprit, et eux-mêmes ne lui racontèrent pas leur affaire.

8. Aussitôt les bienheureux s'adonnèrent à des œuvres et à des travaux pénibles. Ils se proposèrent de ne parler avec personne ; ils jeûnaient, priaient et veillaient et ils passèrent trois ans sans sortir de leur cellule en aucun endroit.

9. Le Père Macaire (Maqarìs) se proposa d'aller les voir. Lorsqu'il arriva près d'eux, ils se levèrent, le reçurent avec joie et le saluèrent ; ils se souhaitèrent mutuellement la paix et s'assirent. Quand ils se préparèrent à dormir, saint Macaire (Mâqarî) fit semblant de dormir et eux-mêmes se trouvaient au même endroit. Alors les bienheureux se levèrent pour prier et le saint demanda à Dieu de lui révéler le degré (de perfection) qu'ils avaient atteint. Aussitôt le haut de la cellule s'ouvrit et il y parut une grande lumière et les saints en prières étendirent les mains vers le ciel durant toute la nuit jusqu'au matin. Saint Macaire vit des rayons de feu qui sortaient de leur bouche, montaient vers le ciel et brûlaient les démons. Le grand avait plus de pouvoir sur les démons que le petit. Saint Macaire (Mâqarîs) connut (ainsi) qu'ils étaient parfaits, il les salua et retourna avec joie à sa cellule.

Lorsque nous entrâmes près de (Maxime), il nous dit : « Quelle heure est-il ? » Nous lui répondîmes : « C'est la fin du jour. » Il nous dit plein de joie : « Dans peu de temps, j'irai à ma demeure éternelle. » Lorsque la nuit fut venue, saint Macaire (Mâqari) nous ordonna d'allumer une lampe et aussitôt l'esprit de saint Maxime se tourna vers le Ciel, il cria et dit : « Partons d'ici. » Il dit encore : « Voici que les prophètes et les apôtres viennent avec moi, » et il commença * fol. 83 r.

Dieu, qui rend à chacun selon son mérite, (fit) qu'au lieu de rejeter l'enfant, ses entrailles sortirent comme la membrane dans laquelle est l'enfant et elle demeura durant trois mois dans les souffrances. Ses cris s'entendirent dans tout Laodicée et certains dirent aux parents de (cette) femme : « Ayez recours à ces saints fils de roi et invoquez-les. » Ils allèrent les trouver et leur firent connaître (le cas de) leur malheureuse fille.

Quand ils l'eurent jetée sur cette femme, elle fut aussitôt guérie et tous ceux qui virent * et entendirent (ce prodige) louèrent Dieu et (ainsi) s'accomplit la parole du Livre : Il ne veut pas la mort du pécheur, mais qu'il se convertisse à son Seigneur et que son âme * fol. 62 v.

Le seize de Ḥaziran (16 juin), lorsqu'on faisait mémoire de la sainte Mère de Dieu, j'allai à la cellule de ces Fils de roi pour les voir, être béni par eux et jouir de leur conversation. Je les trouvai qui portaient des cruches et allaient au puits les remplir d'eau pour boire ; ils m'emmenèrent avec eux. Lorsque nous approchâmes du marais salant qui est appelé Anabôlôs, nous vîmes une vache sauvage, car il y en a beaucoup en cet endroit, qui avait avec elle son veau né aveugle. Quand elle nous aperçut, elle s'enfuit pleine de crainte. Le veau se mit aussi à courir et tomba dans une fosse pleine d'eau salée (et) fétide où il enfonça. Il élevait la tête pour respirer et il ne savait pas où il allait à cause de sa cécité. Quand je vis son infortune, mon

III-IV. LÉGENDES D'ABRAHAM, MAITRE DE BARSOMA, ET DE MAURICE, EMPEREUR DES ROMAINS.

INTRODUCTION

Abraham figure dans le martyrologe de Rabban Sliba, au 18 avril : Transitus sancti Abraham, magistri sancti Barsumae, Anal. Boll., XXVII (1908), p. 180. Un monastère au nord de Modiad dans le Tour Abdin portait son nom, Ibid., et sa biographie figure dans un manuscrit syriaque de Londres, Catalogue Wright, p. 1128/9. Nous éditons ici l'extrait conservé dans le ms. 234 de Paris, fol. 92v. La « Haute Montagne », située près d'Antioche, où Abraham mena la vie monacale a chance, croyons-nous, d'être le Mons Mirabilis que devait immortaliser saint Siméon le jeune. Abraham est mort le 18 avril 406. Son histoire est attribuée (infra, n° 8) à Étienne [1].

L'empereur Maurice, mort le 22 novembre 602, est considéré comme un saint par les Syriens. Nous éditons sa courte biographie qui ne contient en somme, comme les notices des synaxaires et des martyrologes, que le récit de son martyre. Sa crainte des jugements de Dieu, son désir d'être puni en ce monde plutôt qu'en l'autre, sa mansuétude et sa piété sont connus par les historiens byzantins. Notre auteur dramatise le récit grâce à l'intervention d'un ange, suppose que Maurice a été brûlé vif, lorsqu'en réalité il a eu la tête tranchée comme ses enfants, et il est d'accord avec les historiens lorsqu'il raconte que Maurice n'a pas accepté l'acte d'abnégation de la nourrice de son plus jeune fils et a vu mourir tous ses enfants. Il n'a donc pas connu les légendes qui racontaient la survivance du fils aîné, Théodose, ou du dernier fils qui aurait été sauvé par la nourrice et serait mort au Sinaï (cf. F. Nau, Les récits inédits du moine Anastase, Paris, 1902, p. 30-31). Nous éditons ici le manuscrit syriaque de Paris n° 309, fol. 313-317, d'origine nestorienne.

(EXTRAIT) DE L'HISTOIRE D'ABRAHAM DE LA HAUTE MONTAGNE

1. Sa naissance et sa vocation. — L'illustre Mar Abraham tirait origine de parents renommés, comblés de richesses et (pleins) de foi. Ils étaient* de la ville de Constantinople et n'avaient pas d'autre enfant que lui. Quand ils lui eurent appris à écrire, qu'il fut devenu sage et qu'il eut grandi, ils lui firent épouser une femme. Mais lui, qui ne voulait se fiancer qu'au Christ, abandonna ses parents et sa femme dès qu'il en trouva l'occasion, monta sur un navire et arriva en Syrie. Il monta sur une montagne qui est appelée « Haute » et y trouva une caverne habitée par un solitaire nommé Abas (Abous) et il y avait vingt solitaires avec lui. Le bienheureux entra près d'eux et ils le reçurent avec joie. Lorsque le chef du monastère vit que ce jeune homme était rangé et humble, il se réjouit en lui comme d'un trésor excellent et le bienheureux Abraham faisait l'admiration de tous par sa conduite sublime.

2. Plus tard, les frères l'envièrent; ils allèrent trouver le chef du monastère et lui dirent : « Ce frère ne fraie pas avec nous, il faut (choisir) ou lui ou nous dans le monastère. » Lorsque le supérieur vit la jalousie des frères, il appela le bienheureux et lui dit : « Voilà que les frères sont jaloux de toi. » Et lui, lorsqu'il apprit cela, il leur demanda pardon (μετάνοια) et il quitta le monastère. Le chef du monastère sortit avec lui en pleurant et lui dit : « Va en paix, ô fils de belles promesses[1], Abraham, et fais mémoire de moi dans tes prières, » et ils se donnèrent mutuellement leur bénédiction.

3. Il fonde un monastère. — Lorsque le bienheureux se fut un peu éloigné du monastère, il se mit à genoux pour prier et il dit : « O Dieu, conduis-moi et fais-moi arriver où il plaît à ta volonté, car je t'ai aimé seul, par-dessus tout. » Il prit un sentier et arriva au sommet de la montagne. Il y trouva un bel endroit avec un pré dans lequel il y avait une source d'eau. Quand le soir arriva, il fit l'office (il pria), se ramassa * des racines, se rassasia et dormit. * fol. 93 v.
Dieu lui apparut et lui dit : « Abraham, je t'ai préparé cet endroit ; progresse ici (dans la vertu) et travaille pour recevoir la couronne incorruptible, car il arrivera que ton nom sera proclamé par tout le monde et que j'opérerai par tes mains des signes et des prodiges. Lève-toi, ceins tes reins comme un homme fort et bâtis un monastère ici, car j'ai décidé des disciples à venir près de toi ; sois courageux et fort et je serai avec toi. » se bâtit un lieu de réclusion; il se priva de pain et de tout, et il se nourrissait avec des racines et des légumes. Il jeûnait du dimanche jusqu'au dimanche, il portait une tunique de poils (de chameau) et une ceinture de fer sur ses reins en dessous de la tunique. Au bout de trois ans, il descendit de la montagne avec son disciple Étienne : ils allèrent trouver l'évêque, et le bienheureux fut fait prêtre et son disciple diacre; sa renommée se répandit en tout lieu. Les malades et les affligés venaient près de lui de partout et il les guérissait. Les guérisons et les prodiges que fit le bienheureux dépassent (toute) mesure. Par ses prières, ses veilles et son jeûne, il réjouissait toutes les puissances célestes.

5. Ses miracles. — Un homme de pays lointain qui avait une rétention d'urine depuis deux ans (vint le trouver); lorsqu'il arriva près du saint, il pria sur lui et il lui sortit par en bas comme un Hindou (nègre) qui portait une outre (pleine) d'eau et qui sortait en se plaignant et disait : « Malheur à moi à ton sujet, Abraham le montagnard! Voilà longtemps que j'étais dans le ventre * de ce jeune homme et personne ne pouvait m'en faire sortir, et toi tu m'as chassé en une heure. » et s'enfuyait. Le bienheureux se leva, s'agenouilla pour prier et (versa) d'abondantes larmes, puis il le signa de la croix et interpella le démon. Lorsque ce Légion [1] entendit le nom du Christ, il sortit et (le malade) fut guéri.

7. Il reçoit Barsoma. — Le Christ apparut au bienheureux et lui dit : « Abraham, Abraham, ta conduite a plu à Dieu. Lève-toi et va à la ville de Samosate, il y a là un jeune homme orphelin nommé Barṣômâ; prends-le avec toi, car ce m'est un vase d'élection. » Le bienheureux fit connaître aux frères cette divine grâce et se mit en route. Il arriva à Samosate et trouva près de la rive du fleuve un (enfant) qui marchait et pleurait. Il courut à lui, lui prit la main et lui dit : « Salut. » Et (l'enfant) leva son bonnet de sa tête, s'inclina et fut béni par lui. Son disciple Étienne — celui qui écrivit (cette) histoire et qui fut honoré de la charge épiscopale — vit, par (l'effet de) l'Esprit divin, trois aigles qui descendaient du ciel et se rassemblaient dans le monastère du bienheureux, tandis qu'un autre aigle sortait du monastère à leur rencontre, et ils montaient (ensuite) au ciel. HISTOIRE DE SAINT MAURICE, EMPEREUR DES ROMAINS heures à entendre l'un et l'autre et à donner ses ordres, deux heures, la huitième et la neuvième, à prendre de la nourriture, trois heures à la prière et quatre heures au sommeil. Quant aux huit heures restantes, il faisait l'office avec diligence et récitait (les psaumes de) David. Pour les diverses saisons et les (diverses) longueurs des jours et des nuits, tout était ainsi ordonné et les différentes affaires réglées.

1. Ses vertus. — En sus des nombreuses qualités et du genre de vie rigide de Maurice, empereur des Romains, (ce prince) ajoutait encore * à ses travaux de faire fonction d'ὕπαρχος, c'est-à-dire de juge. Il craignait en effet qu'il n'y eût quelque défaut dans l'un quelconque des actes de son règne : que l'on n'avilît la justice et qu'on ne fît fléchir les jugements, qu'on n'épargnât les riches et qu'on n'acquittât les coupables. De plus il avait divisé les heures du jour et de la nuit : il consacrait les trois premières heures aux jugements, les deux suivantes aux affaires du royaume, puis deux * fol. 313 v.

2. Il accepte la mort. — Devenu vieux, il avait la préoccupation de

(Un jour) qu'il ne s'était pas lassé de (faire) cette prière l'espace de trois heures, un ange lui apparut sous un aspect glorieux et pacifique. (L'ange) le vit tandis qu'il faisait l'office et lui dit : « Tu as fatigué Dieu par ta prière depuis longtemps. Tu demandes à Dieu et tu requiers de souffrir ici(-bas) la punition du péché à cause duquel tu ne serais pas digne du degré parfait, et de ne pas être privé à cause de lui du bien parfait. Je puis te témoigner que tu as tel péché qui te prive du degré supérieur; tu auras cependant part avec les saints. Si tu veux conserver ton royaume et la vie de tes enfants pendant longtemps, cesse d'adresser cette demande, et, à la résurrection, ta récompense sera celle des justes. Si tu veux

Si nous ne nous éveillons pas et ne cherchons pas à nous sauver nous-mêmes, nous n'avons plus qu'à périr entièrement. Tant que Maurice ou l'un de ses enfants vivra, l'empire des Romains sera sans force et les ennemis ne seront pas réduits. Si vous voulez m'écouter, nous le détruirons avec toute sa famille et nous le ferons périr le dernier. » Tous les Romains répondirent d'une seule voix et lui dirent : « Fais ce que tu veux, nous sommes avec toi. »

Il reconnut son amour, la bénit et lui dit : « Que Dieu te récompense en place de moi, pour avoir eu la pensée de livrer ton fils à la mort à la place du mien. » Alors cette femme, comme si les Romains l'avaient mal renseignée, leur donna l'excuse suivante : « Les messagers sont arrivés chez moi en grand tumulte, je suis venue sans savoir de quoi il s'agissait; envoyez donc avec moi et je donnerai le fils de l'empereur. » Elle amena donc enfin cet enfant et l'empereur témoigna et dit : « Celui-ci est mon fils * en vérité. » Les Romains n'eurent même pas pitié de celui-ci et le tuèrent sur ses frères. *fol. 316 v.

Ils versèrent du naphte sur les bois, puis amenèrent Maurice, les mains liées derrière le dos, et le mirent au milieu du navire. Ils mirent le feu au bois tout autour de Maurice et abandonnèrent le navire sur la mer. Il y eut un grand incendie. Nous entreprenons, avec la grâce de Dieu et le secours de sa faveur, d'écrire un abrégé des miracles que le Seigneur a accomplis par l'intermédiaire de son grand martyr, saint Abtolmaous (Ptolémée), le jour de la purification de son église[1], le 11e jour de Baouna (5 juin). Que sa sainte intercession soit avec nous! Amen.

I. — Premier miracle de saint Ptolémée.

Que dirai-je et comment parlerai-je de toi, ô mon seigneur saint et pur, martyr de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ, Anba Abtolmaous (Ptolémée), après les nombreux prodiges et guérisons opérés dans ton église?

Il y avait, dans la ville d'Achmounaïn, un notable qui jouissait d'une grande considération. Cet homme avait un fils qui était perclus. Il avait appelé près de lui de nombreux médecins, mais ils n'avaient pu le guérir. Ayant entendu parler des guérisons obtenues par le sang de saint Ptolémée qui était dans le puits de son église, il y porta aussitôt son enfant, entra avec lui à l'église, et le plongea trois fois dans l'eau du puits, puis il le coucha au-dessous du corps de saint Ptolémée. L'enfant s'endormit; alors le saint, qui était couché au-dessus de lui de toute sa longueur, lui apparut sous la forme d'un guerrier de haute stature, tenant à la main une épée nue. L'enfant effrayé s'éveilla; il se leva et se mit à courir avec agilité en criant : « Béni soit le Seigneur Jésus-Christ! » Au même instant, son père s'éveilla aussi et tout le peuple

Puis il emmena son enfant dans sa maison et tous les deux glorifiaient Dieu et son saint martyr, le grand Ptolémée, que son intercession soit avec nous. Amen.

II. — Deuxième miracle.

Ainsi j'ai vu une femme affligée de violents maux de tête, qui était venue à cette église. Elle était toute hors d'elle-même par la violence de son mal. Elle se baigna dans le puits où se trouve le sang du saint martyr, et elle fut guérie à l'instant sans attendre un jour de plus. Par ma vie, je crois que ce martyr ne guérit que ceux qu'il choisit. » Elle répétait ces paroles à son mari, avec d'autres propos semblables. Il lui répondit : « Dis-moi tout ce que tu pourras; il faut que je reste ici encore deux jours, pour que je voie si le martyr aura pitié de moi, comme il a eu pitié de ceux * qu'il a guéris, ou s'il m'abandonnera. » * f. 102 r°.

2. Pendant qu'il dormait la nuit, saint Ptolémée lui apparut sous la forme d'un médecin, ayant avec lui des remèdes. Il lui dit pendant son sommeil : « O homme, pourquoi es-tu si pressé : tu es pusillanime et tu as peu de cœur pour supporter ton mal pénible. Ne sais-tu pas que toute maladie et toute pauvreté est la conséquence de l'impudicité. Avoue donc maintenant et promets de ne plus retomber dans l'adultère et tu seras délivré de ta maladie. » Il confessa donc tous ses péchés à saint Ptolémée et prit la résolution de faire pénitence et de ne plus retomber dans l'adultère le reste de sa vie. Le saint lui posa alors le doigt sur le ventre et à l'instant il fut guéri de son mal et il recouvra la santé. Il se réveilla plein de joie, appela son épouse et lui

III. — Troisième miracle.

1. Il y avait un homme nommé Tafṣir dans une ville que l'on appelait Ṭarfiat al-Djedidat[2] (la Neuve). Cet homme passait la plus grande partie de ses journées dans les cavernes, tout nu, sans permettre à personne de reposer près de lui à cause des démons qui l'affligeaient et le tourmentaient. Plusieurs hommes de sa ville vinrent donc à lui, s'emparèrent de sa personne, le garrottèrent et le portèrent à l'église de saint Ptolémée. Ils le mirent au milieu de l'église et l'y attachèrent solidement. Il s'écria aussitôt à haute voix : « Qu'y a-t-il entre nous et toi, ô Ptolémée? Pourquoi nous chasses-tu

Puis il se releva plein de santé, comme s'il n'avait jamais été malade ni possédé du démon.

2. Tous les habitants de la région d'Achmounaïn[1] furent dans une grande joie à cause de ce miracle éclatant. On apportait en grand nombre les malades au sanctuaire (τόπος) du saint et, pendant qu'ils célébraient ses louanges près de son tombeau, ils recouvraient la santé et étaient guéris de toutes leurs infirmités.

Et moi qui suis en vérité si méprisable, je dis que ma langue est trop faible pour rapporter même une faible partie des vertus et des guérisons nombreuses que tu as opérées à ton saint martyrium, au lieu où se trouve ton corps pur. Les rois ont entendu parler de tes œuvres merveilleuses et ils ont loué ton nom, car tous ceux qui ont entendu parler de ta constance et de ta patience, louent Dieu et le bénissent. Tel est surtout Anbâ Kîrillos (Cyrille) l'évêque, qui est venu visiter ton église pour obtenir la bénédiction de ton corps pur. Car Dieu a voulu proportionner à ta patience et à ta persévérance dans ta lutte pour la vraie foi de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ, les nombreux prodiges qu'il accomplit par ton intermédiaire et que la renommée fait

Ils réduisirent en captivité un grand nombre des fidèles de la sainte église qui était en ce lieu. Plusieurs frères du couvent s'en allèrent. Ensuite ils vinrent au couvent d'Ad-Dâkhil, et parvinrent jusqu'à la ville d'Al-Bahnassâ[2]. Ils y réduisirent en captivité plusieurs villages au pied de la montagne, puis ils arrivèrent au martyrium de saint Ptolémée.

Quand ceux dont les biens avaient été pillés et les enfants réduits en captivité apprirent ce grand miracle du saint, ils vinrent en grande allégresse et reprirent leurs biens et leurs enfants. V. — Cinquième miracle.

1. Il y avait à l'église de saint Anba Ptolémée un prêtre consacré à son service. Quand un homme faible, pauvre et dénué de tout venait à passer, il ne lui adressait jamais la parole et ne l'invitait point à entrer au réfectoire pour y prendre de la nourriture. Ce prêtre abolit le règlement de saint Anba Iouchab, le prêtre qui était en cette église avant lui. Mais il ne lui suffit pas de manquer de miséricorde et de bienfaisance, il y joignit encore le péché d'impureté. Dieu voulut manifester son infidélité, car l'épouse de cet homme impur était morte, et Satan avait trouvé en lui une demeure : il y sema le péché d'impureté.

2. Il y avait, dans une localité appelée Sabiḥ, une jeune fille d'une prestance magnifique et d'une grande beauté. Elle était sujette à la migraine et n'avait de repos ni le jour ni la nuit. Elle entendit parler des miracles de saint Anba Ptolémée et des prodiges accomplis par son corps. Elle demanda à son père de la conduire au sanctuaire (τόπος) de saint Ptolémée. Son père l'y transporta et la déposa dans le vestibule de l'église, pour l'aider à obtenir sa guérison. La jeune fille implora le secours de Dieu par l'intercession du saint et Dieu entendit sa prière et regarda ses souffrances. Elle prit un peu d'huile

* f. 104 v°. de la lampe; elle s'en oignit * et elle recouvra le repos et fut guérie à l'instant. Son père donna alors à l'église plusieurs ex-voto et de riches présents.

3. A cette occasion le prêtre impur regarda la jeune fille d'un œil mauvais. Son père venait souvent à l'église pour voir sa fille et pour être béni par le corps du saint. Quand la jeune fille fut guérie, elle revint chez son père. Quelques jours après, celui-ci invita le prêtre à prendre un repas chez lui. Ce malheureux cachait le péché dans son cœur, comme les vieillards de Suzanne, que confondit Daniel le Prophète. Il mangea et but dans la maison de cet homme. La jeune fille était cachée dans un lieu écarté de la maison. Son père, dans la simplicité de son cœur et pour obtenir la pureté dans sa maison, fit signe au prêtre de passer chez la jeune fille afin de la bénir et de prier pour elle. Ainsi ce prêtre pervers trouva l'occasion de l'approcher. Quand il l'eut abordée, il lui adressa la parole avec une perfidie diabolique, et il lui dit : « O jeune fille, il y a longtemps que je ne t'avais vue; je suis épris de toi, je te désire et je veux m'unir à toi. Je n'en avais pas trouvé l'occasion jusqu'à présent, mais j'ai pu arriver jusqu'à toi en cet instant. »

4. La jeune fille ignorait la condition des femmes et ne savait rien des choses du monde. Elle lui dit : « De quoi as-tu besoin, mon père, et que veux-tu me dire en ce moment! » Il lui répondit : « Je t'aime et j'éprouve pour toi une passion ardente. » Elle lui demanda : « Que veux-tu et quelle est ta passion? » Il lui dit : « Je veux dormir avec toi, parce que ma femme est morte, et m'a laissé de l'argent, des bijoux, et une grande quantité d'objets de parure pour les femmes; je te les donnerai tous si tu dors avec moi. »

6. Après avoir entendu ces paroles de la jeune fille, le prêtre pervers interrompit la conversation pour ce jour-là et il s'en alla. Il commit ensuite de nombreux péchés avec des femmes de mauvaise vie, et il ne passait pas de jours sans tomber dans la fornication. Or, le premier jour du mois de Barmouda (27 mars), qui était la fête de la nativité de saint Ptolémée, le notable, père de la jeune fille, l'amena au lieu du martyre du saint. Le prêtre les reçut en grand honneur et les fit monter à son appartement, au-dessus de l'église, à un endroit écarté où il n'y avait personne. Il les traita avec une grande amabilité, mais ses pensées étaient diaboliques et perverses, et l'affabilité qu'il leur témoignait était menteuse. Un moment après, il prit du vin ce qu'ils fussent endormis, appesantis par l'ivresse. Ensuite il transporta le père de la jeune fille dans un lieu spécial où se trouvaient de nombreux notables; puis il se retira et vint vers la jeune fille. Elle était plongée dans le sommeil profond de la nuit et n'avait conscience de rien. Il s'approchait de la jeune fille pour commettre sur elle un acte infâme sans qu'elle en eût connaissance, mais le saint ne le laissa pas faire et ne lui permit pas d'atteindre son but criminel; il lui apparut en ce moment revêtu d'un habit royal de couleur blanche, couvert de broderies magnifiques. Il le saisit par la tête, le fit descendre vers le milieu de l'église, le tint suspendu entre le ciel et la terre et le laissa dans cette position en proie à un supplice terrible et douloureux. Il resta ainsi suspendu jusqu'à ce qu'il eût avoué tout ce qu'il avait entrepris, ce à quoi il avait pensé et ce qu'il avait fait depuis le commencement jusqu'à la fin. Il y avait ce jour-là une grande foule de peuple réunie dans l'église, et ils virent tous le prêtre suspendu la tête en bas. Ensuite il tomba sur le sol et son corps se rompit en deux parties. Il parut alors un Abyssin de haute taille et de couleur noire. Il ouvrit sa bouche qui était comme la gueule d'un lion gigantesque, et il engloutit cet hypocrite impur, puis il disparut dans la terre au milieu de l'église, sans que personne sût où il alla, et personne ne l'a revu jusqu'à présent. Quand la jeune fille apprit cela, elle se leva et vint au monastère de saint Anba Chenouda[1] à Adriba (Athrib); elle s'y fit religieuse et remercia Dieu de ce qu'il l'avait préservée dans son ignorance.

8. Quant à moi, serviteur indigne, je vous ai fait connaître cette histoire, ô mes frères aimés, pour que chacun de vous ait de bonnes mœurs * et fuie l'impudicité; pour que vous ne soyez pas sans miséricorde et pour que vos âmes ne s'enorgueillissent pas. Fuyez le péché et contentez-vous de l'usage légitime de ce que vous possédez : biens, épouse et autre chose. Car l'ennemi désire multiplier la discorde entre les frères qui s'aiment. Sachez en effet que toute querelle et toute haine, que la calomnie, la médisance, l'inimitié, l'aversion des uns pour les autres viennent de l'ennemi, c'est-à-dire de Satan (que Dieu le confonde); c'est lui qui met la discorde entre l'époux et l'épouse, et qui sème la haine entre le père et le fils, la fille et la mère. C'est lui qui fait la guerre à tout homme, et particulièrement aux fils du baptême pour les entraîner dans son malheur et leur faire perdre la vie éternelle. Gardez-vous de lui, ô Chrétiens; aimez-vous les uns les autres d'un amour fort et sincère qui n'admette pas la duplicité, et que n'altère pas la rancune et le soupçon.

les tourments éternels de l'enfer où il n'y a point de repos et qui n'aura point de fin. Considère, ô prêtre, le titre que tu portes et que tes actions en soient dignes. Notre-Seigneur a dit dans son saint Évangile : « Celui qui n'écoute pas ma parole et ne l'accomplit pas, le Fils de l'homme le confondra quand il viendra dans la gloire de son Père, entouré de ses anges purs. » Et quand le Seigneur confond un homme, qui donc * le consolera et l'accueillera? Le prêtre impudique est maudit du Seigneur et damné par lui dans les siècles des siècles, et il ne mérite pas de voir la gloire du Christ, le jour où il glorifiera ses saints. Le prêtre dont la femme est morte et qui n'a pas la force de contenir cette passion doit pourtant préférer la continence plutôt que de brûler du feu de la concupiscence, selon l'expression de Paul, l'Apôtre véridique; car l'impudicité brûle le cœur qui en est enflammé. Un grand nombre de personnes ne peuvent se passer du mariage, tandis que beaucoup d'autres luttent pour conserver la pureté dans leurs cœurs et dans leurs corps et ils gardent leurs âmes dans une continence parfaite. La punition de l'impureté est la misère en ce monde et dans l'autre, le châtiment éternel, à moins que le coupable ne se repente et ne fasse pénitence et ne s'abstienne complètement du mal; car Dieu se réjouit de la pénitence. L'impureté est un poison qui n'a point d'autre remède que la continence absolue et la pénitence sincère. * f. 106 v°.

Gomorrhe, étant tombés dans l'impureté, furent anéantis, brûlés par la colère divine, et ils périrent de façons misérables.

La misère s'approche de toi rapidement, ô impudique, à cause de tes péchés, car l'impureté efface et enlève du visage la marque du baptême. Nous savons que saint Nabâdhouros, évêque de Ṭaḥâ, observait souvent, pendant qu'il célébrait le saint sacrifice, les visages des assistants. Il voyait la gloire de Dieu se retirer des pécheurs et leurs visages devenir ténébreux; il voyait aussi leurs anges lui présenter leurs œuvres mauvaises. Il les chassait alors de l'église et il ne leur permettait pas de s'acquitter des fonctions du sacerdoce. Y a-t-il un péché plus grave que celui du prêtre qui célèbre le saint sacrifice dans le temple du Seigneur avec la conscience chargée du péché d'impureté, comme ce prêtre impudique dont le nom fut proscrit de toutes les églises du Christ qui sont en ce monde, et dont le nom sera effacé encore

Nous avons appris, en effet, que les anges, ayant au commencement désobéi à l'ordre de leur Seigneur, tombèrent et furent précipités dans les ténèbres extérieures jusqu'au jour de la résurrection. Considérez encore ceux qui se laissèrent aller à leurs désirs dans le désert, comment ils moururent et leurs ossements restèrent dans la solitude. Recourons à Dieu contre de tels péchés et demandons au Seigneur qu'il nous rende assez forts pour ne pas nous écarter de ses commandements. Pensons aux miracles de saint Ptolémée que nous venons de

Son sang est devenu un moyen de salut et un remède ; il a guéri les malades et fortifié les faibles, comme faisait la manne pour les fils d'Israël ; et la terre où a été déposé son corps est devenue un moyen de guérison et un remède pour ceux qui la visitent et prosternent sur elle leurs visages, car elle a été sanctifiée par le contact du saint corps qui a été déposé en elle. Quiconque visite son église et oint son corps avec une foi sincère, obtient du Seigneur la guérison de toutes ses infirmités. Malheur à qui aurait l'audace de venir à l'église avec un cœur souillé de péchés honteux, car il serait confondu au jour du jugement.

Car ceux qui ont été témoins de ta patience et de ton zèle, ô glorieux martyr Ptolémée, ont abandonné leurs maisons, leurs demeures et leurs biens et ont livré leurs corps aux tourments pour te ressembler. Par ta sainte ardeur et par ta patience dans une terre étrangère, tu t'es préparé une demeure lumineuse dans le royaume des cieux. A cause de ta patience et de ton zèle parfait, Dieu t'a appelé au banquet sacré en communion avec tes frères les martyrs. Maintenant, mes frères bien-aimés, qui êtes assemblés dans ce martyrium pur, nous devons unir nos cœurs dans un ardent amour pour Dieu et dans une grande affection spirituelle. Chassons de nos cœurs les pensées mauvaises pour marcher dans la bonne voie et remporter la victoire des chrétiens fidèles.

Il était plein d'admiration pour lui-même, très orgueilleux, et il avait une haute opinion de sa propre sagesse et de son mérite. Il commettait beaucoup de péchés, mais il n'aimait pas à se les rappeler. Il avait un fils unique et pas d'autre enfant.

2. Il y avait dans ce village un tombeau, grand * et vaste, habité depuis longtemps par un grand nombre de démons. Il arriva qu'un jour ce diacre entra dans le tombeau, l'examina et aperçut une inscription en langue grecque. Il ne savait pas lire le grec et n'en avait aucune connaissance. Mais l'un des démons du tombeau lui apprit la lecture de cette inscription et le diacre en fut dans l'admiration. Elle était ainsi conçue : « Quiconque renoncera à adorer Dieu et à servir le Christ, et viendra ici adorer l'idole qui est en ce lieu, elle lui fera connaître toutes choses et lui apprendra où se trouvent les trésors de ce tombeau. » Il se dit alors en lui-même : « Je vais abandonner le service du Christ et aller trouver cette idole. » Puis il s'écria d'une voix retentissante, avec ses lèvres impures : « O Satan, je renonce au service du Christ et je viens à toi, ô Satan, avec mes enfants, et nous t'adorerons, et ma femme se joindra aussi à nous. » * f. 108 r°.

Il renonça à l'Église, abandonna la prière et s'en abstint complètement, et, de tout son cœur et de toute son âme, il adora le démon, fit part à sa femme de ce qui lui était arrivé et lui demanda d'adorer aussi le démon. Ne renonçons pas à ce qui demeure et ne désirons pas ce qui passe. O mon frère, notre culte est le meilleur de tous et il n'y a aucune somme d'or et d'argent qui vaille d'être préférée au service de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ, au point de nous faire renoncer à son saint nom et renier sa croix vivificatrice. » Il lui répondit : « O ma sœur, je ne négligerai point ce que j'ai entendu de mes oreilles et vu de mes yeux : que celui qui renoncera à son culte et à sa foi obtiendra de quoi l'enrichir. » Et au même moment il partit et alla au tombeau et il dit au démon : « J'ai fait ta volonté; montre-moi le trésor du tombeau. » Le démon

Il sortit donc et alla annoncer cela à sa femme, et il lui dit : « Si tu ne viens pas adorer le démon, je ne vivrai plus avec toi et je ne te parlerai plus. » La femme, en entendant ces paroles, fut vivement affligée; elle se fâcha, le quitta et retourna chez son père, dans la ville de Ṭaḥâ. Pendant la nuit du dimanche, les prêtres cherchèrent le diacre pour qu'il priât avec eux à l'église. Mais il leur dit qu'il était malade. C'était une ruse de sa part. Il leur dit encore : « Je suis très mal et je ne puis aller à l'église. » Ils le quittèrent donc et allèrent à l'église; ils cherchèrent le nâkous, mais ils ne le trouvèrent pas et ils en furent très étonnés.

7. L'enfant fut délivré à ce moment. Sa mère le prit et l'emmena chez elle en glorifiant Dieu et en remerciant son saint martyr Ptolémée. Alors cette femme, la mère de l'enfant, fit connaître à l'évêque que son mari, le père de l'enfant, avait adoré l'idole et renoncé au culte du Christ. L'évêque décida alors de soumettre à une enquête le diacre qui avait adoré l'idole. Il le réprimanda et lui dit : « Où est ta crainte du Seigneur et ton culte pour le Christ, toi qui as rejeté le salut? Comment en es-tu venu à servir le démon et à adorer les idoles? Et tu as brûlé le nâkous de l'église! » Et il lui adressa de durs reproches. Cet homme éprouva alors une crainte salutaire; il pleura abondamment et amèrement et il se repentit des péchés qu'il avait commis et de son infidélité. Il fit une pénitence salutaire. L'évêque le reçut favorablement et lui ordonna d'aller au monastère de saint Bakhomios (Pacôme) et d'y embrasser la vie religieuse. Il pleura et pria et demanda au Seigneur pardon et miséricorde pendant tout le reste de sa vie. Il prit une ferme résolution, se fit moine et mena une vie parfaite. Il atteignit un degré éminent dans la

8. Nous demandons à Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ, par les prières de cet homme saint et pieux, par celles du martyr élu et choisi, par celles de tous les martyrs et de tous les saints, et surtout par l'intercession de Notre-Dame, la Mère de Lumière, qui enfanta le Sauveur, de nous pardonner nos péchés et d'effacer nos fautes. Qu'il soit indulgent pour nos torts et nos manquements, qu'il se détourne de nos péchés et qu'il nous accorde une belle place avec ses martyrs et ses saints. Qu'il agrée nos prières et nos jeûnes, qu'il reçoive nos offrandes et que nos supplications lui soient agréables. Qu'il nous dirige dans les bonnes œuvres et qu'il écarte de nous les maux de l'épreuve et de l'adversité. Qu'il nourrisse nos orphelins et prenne soin de nos veuves; qu'il accorde la continence à nos jeunes hommes, la santé aux hommes d'âge mûr et la force à nos vieillards. Qu'il fasse grandir nos enfants dans les dispositions qui lui plaisent. Qu'il donne le repos aux âmes de nos pères et de nos frères et de tous ceux qui sont décédés avant nous dans la foi orthodoxe. Qu'il nous rende fermes sur le rocher de la foi, confessant son nom, et victorieux par la grâce divine qui nous a été conférée par le baptême. Qu'il nous accorde à tous la paix dans sa miséricorde et qu'il nous fasse entendre cette parole de bonheur : « Venez à moi, les bénis de mon Père; prenez possession du royaume qui vous a été préparé avant la fondation du monde, ce que l'œil

AVIS DES ÉDITEURS

La Patrologie orientale est destinée à compléter les Patrologies grecque et latine de Migne, dont elle emprunte le format, ainsi que la Patrologie syriaque de Mgr Graffin. Tous les textes chrétiens orientaux qui n'entrent pas dans ces collections sont donc de son ressort.

Les éditeurs s'attacheront à faire imprimer d'abord les traductions et les commentaires de la Sainte Écriture, les ouvrages historiques, les synaxaires et les apocryphes; ils admettent, en même temps que des traductions latines, des traductions en allemand, en anglais, en français et en italien : ils se sont déjà assuré le concours de MM. Asin y Palacios, à Madrid (arabe); René Basset, à Alger (arabe et éthiopien); E. Blochet, à Paris (arabe et persan); J. Bousquet, à Paris (grec); C. Butler, à Cambridge (grec); E.-W. Brooks, à Londres (syriaque); Mgr P. Chebli, à Beyrouth (arabe); L. Clugnet, à Paris (grec); Conti-Rossini, à Rome (éthiopien): W.-E. Crum, à Londres (copte); F. Cumont, à Bruxelles (grec); R. P. Delehaye, à Bruxelles (grec); H. Le prix est encore maintenu pour les Souscripteurs à 60 centimes la feuille de seize pages (port en sus). Ce prix est aussi réduit que possible eu égard au format (format de Migne) et au mode de publication (texte et traduction réunis); aussi, après l'apparition de chaque volume, le prix sera porté à 0 fr. 95 la feuille. On peut ne souscrire qu'aux ouvrages publiés dans une langue déterminée (texte ou traduction).

Les éditeurs publieront chaque année de quatre à huit fascicules de quatre-vingts à deux cents pages chacun, qui seront réunis en volumes de cinq à six cents pages. Chaque série de dix volumes sera suivie d'une table générale.
